4 Cal. App. 385

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—AUTHORITY OF COUNCIL—PREMATURE ACTION.

The Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153) requires that, after a resolution of intention for certain improvements has been passed by the city council, the street superintendent shall cause a notice to be published for six days in daily newspapers of the city, and that, after 20 days from the expiration of time of such publication, the city council shall have jurisdiction to order any of the improvements to be made. Held, that an ordinance ordering such work to be done, adopted by the city council on the nineteenth day after the last day of publication required by the act was premature and void, although not signed by the mayor until two days thereafter, and then published for two days.

2. SAME—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—PROVISIONS TENDING TO INCREASE COST—RESPONSIBILITY FOR LOSSES.

A contract for street improvements providing that all damage arising from the nature of the work, unforeseen difficulties, the action of the elements or acts or omissions on the part of the contractor or his employés shall be sustained by the contractor, is void, since such clause would naturally tend to increase the cost of the work and the burden on the taxpayers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

JAMES, Special Judge. Plaintiffs are severally the owners of parcels of real property in the city of Los Angeles against which liens are claimed under certain proceedings taken by the city for the improvement of Temple street. Defendant Tryon-Brain Company, a corporation, was the contractor, and performed work of laying cement sidewalks and building cement curbs along certain portions of said street. Upon completion of the work the rights of defendant company under their contract were assigned to defendant O'Dea. Certain irregularities in the proceedings taken by the city and alleged defects in the form of contract made with the Tryon-Brain Company formed the basis for this suit by which it was sought to have it adjudged that the assessments made against the several pieces of property owned by plaintiffs to secure payment of the contract price for the doing of said work were void, and that no liens attached for the benefit of defendant contractor. A statement of facts was agreed upon in the lower court, and, upon submission of the cause, judgment was entered for plaintiffs, and defendants have appealed.

The proceedings for the improvement of Temple street were taken under authority of the act of the Legislature known commonly as the "Vrooman Act" (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153), and acts amendatory thereof. Respondents contend that at the time the city council attempted to order the work to be done it had not acquired jurisdiction, because 20 days had not expired after the publication by the street superintendent of a notice of the intention to have the work performed when the council adopted an ordinance directing the work to be done. The Vrooman act provides that, after the resolution of intention has been passed and adopted by the city council, the street superintendent shall "cause a notice similar in substance, to be published for six days in one or more daily newspapers published and circulated in said city, * * *" and that "at the expiration of twenty days after the expiration of the time of said publication by said street superintendent * * * the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any of the work to be done, or improvement to be made, which is authorized by this act." From the agreed statement of facts it appears that the street superintendent published the notice required of him to be published, in a daily newspaper for six days, commencing on April 9, 1903, and ending on April 15, 1903, one of the intervening days being Sunday. On May 4, 1903, the nineteenth day after the last day of publication of the notice by the street superintendent, the city council adopted an ordinance ordering the work to be done. This ordinance was signed by the mayor of the city on May 11, 1903, and published for two days thereafter, to wit, on May 13 and 14, 1903.

It is conceded by appellants that, if the order made by ordinance providing for the doing of the work was complete on the 4th day of May, when the ordinance was adopted, this order was a nullity and made without jurisdiction, but it is argued that the ordinance did not become final until after approval by the mayor and publication for two days, and that, therefore, the order so made should be deemed to have been made as of the date when the ordinance was signed by the mayor or published. There is probably no doubt that the city council in directing street work to be done under authority of the act here under discussion, might do so by simple resolution; in fact, it has been so held in the cases of Los Angeles v. Waldron, 65 Cal. 285, 3 Pac. 890, and Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 157, 44 Pac. 921, 45 Pac. 1057. In the case last cited the Supreme Court said: "An ordinance is also a resolution, or at least, so far as this statute is concerned, they are equivalent. The street law provides a complete scheme or procedure for street work, and, so far as it goes, governs. The charter cannot make a different procedure by requiring more or less. Otherwise there would not be a uniform operation of the law for all cities of a class. As to publication, the street law expressly provides that no other shall be necessary for the validity of the procedure. The ordinance in this regard is in the form suited to the charter of Los Angeles, and provides that the clerk shall cause the same to be published for two days, and that thereupon it shall take effect. Counsel says this publication was before it took effect, and the publication required by the street law is after it has become a valid resolution. * * * Under either view, the resolution is finally passed before publication. Whether we say it is a subsisting ordinance, though it can have no effect as an ordinance, or that it takes effect only after publication, when for the first time it be operative as an ordinance, is a matter of taste."

The city council here adopted the ordinance ordering the work to be done on the nineteenth day after the expiration of the last date of publication of the street superintendent's notice. The order of the council was complete upon the adoption of the ordinance; there was nothing left to be done by that body respecting its order after adoption of the ordinance by vote taken and recorded. But the council had acquired no jurisdiction to take any step essential to the validity of an order directing the work to be done until the full term of 20 days had run. If its order made on the nineteenth day was valid, as well might it then have adopted the ordinance on the first, third, or any other day after the termination of the period of publication of the street superintendent's notice. It appears clearly that the ordinance of May 4, 1903, directing the work of improvement to be done was prematurely adopted, without jurisdiction, and was ineffective and void for any purpose. The subsequent proceedings taken, therefore, failed to give any support to defendant's claim to rights of lien against the property of plaintiffs.

The further contention of respondents, that the provision in the specifications obligating appellants to assume responsibility for loss by reason of damages which might accrue rendered the contract invalid, should also be sustained. The contract executed between the city and appellants contained a provision that the work should be done according to "specifications on file in the office of the city clerk of said city which are known as 'Specifications No. 54 and 55,' and made part of this contract." Incorporated in these specifications was the following condition: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the same, or from the action of the elements, or from any encumbrances on the lines of the work, or for any act or omission on the part of the contractor, or any person or agent employed by him, not authorized by this agreement, shall be sustained by the contractor." This condition became a part of the contract. A provision similar to this was held in the case of Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 664, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, to render the contract void, because it added a term not authorized by statute, and also because it changed and might increase the burden of the taxpayer.

In the Blochman Case it was said by the court: "No one can say that a contractor would agree to stand behind the city and hold it harmless from damage arising out of the work he had undertaken to do without some compensation additional to the necessary cost of the material and labor to him, plus a reasonable profit. * * * The law does not authorize a municipality to escape its liability by shifting it to the shoulders of the contractor, and, in attempting to do so, it imposed conditions that would naturally tend to increase the cost of the work." See, also, the cases of Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, 32 Pac. 701; Alameda Macadamizing Co. v. Pringle, 130 Cal. 226, 62 Pac. 394, 52 L. R. A. 264, 80 Am. St. Rep. 124.

Other minor points are argued in the briefs of counsel, but, as those discussed are determinative of this appeal, it will be unnecessary to consider them.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

I concur: GRAY, P. J.

ALLEN, J. I concur in the judgment upon the ground first stated in the opinion.

MONETA CANNING & PRESERVING CO. v. MARTIN et al. (Civ. 276.)

TRIAL—FINDINGS.

Findings are not necessary in relation to separate defenses in support of which no evidence was offered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 908, 914.]

F. B. Woodruff, for appellants. E. J. Fleming and Paul E. Ussher, for respondent.

ALLEN, J. Action to recover the agreed price of certain pea vines delivered to appellants by plaintiff under a written agreement. Judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

The defendants answered separately, each denying the execution of the agreement or the receipt of the vines. The court found in favor of plaintiff upon these issues, and the evidence is uncontradicted in support of its findings. An attempt was made by defendants to plead a rescission of the contract upon the grounds of fraud in its procurement and a total failure of consideration. The answers were each insufficient to constitute a defense or to entitle the defendants to any relief. No facts were pleaded showing fraud upon plaintiff's part; neither was any fraudulent intent claimed, nor is it averred that defendants were ignorant as to the representations upon which they claimed to have relied.

It is argued by appellants that the vines not being existent when the contract was made, a warranty of their merchantable character and soundness failed under the provisions of section 1768, Civ. Code. Were all this conceded, there is no evidence tending to show that the goods were either unsound or unmerchantable when delivered; but the contrary appears. There was no finding of the court in relation to the separate defenses, but, there being no evidence offered in support thereof, findings were unnecessary. A brief synopsis of the evidence is set out in the transcript, from which it appears that the judgment of the court could not have been otherwise than as rendered.

MERRITT v. McFARLAND et al. (Civ. 254.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — DEFECTIVE STREETS—INJURY TO TRAVELER—LIABILITY OF SUPERINTENDENT OF STREETS.

The Vrooman Act (St. 1885, pp. 160, 161, c. 153, §§ 22, 23) provides that it shall be the duty of the superintendent of streets to see that all laws, ordinances, and regulations as to the streets be fully carried into effect; that he shall give bond to the city; that if he fails to see that the laws, ordinances, and regulations as to the streets are executed his sureties shall be liable to any person injured in consequence of said official neglect; that if, in consequence of a street or highway, improved under the act, being out of repair, any person, while carefully using such street, suffer damage, no recourse therefor shall be had against the city, but if the defect shall have existed for 24 hours after notice thereof to the superintendent, then the person on whom the law imposed the obligation to repair, and the officer through whose official negligence such defect remains unrepaired, shall be liable to the party injured; provided that said superintendent has the authority to make said repairs, under the direction of the city council. The evidence showed that, under his supervision as superintendent, Seventh street, a street of the city dedicated to public travel, was cut down so as to leave an embankment two feet high on one side of the street, but within its boundaries as actually improved by the board of trustees and by his act; that, while plaintiff was traveling L street, a street of the city dedicated to public travel and traveled as a public street, and while on the place where the sidewalk should be, but where no sidewalk was laid, and when at the intersection of Seventh and L streets, at night, he fell over said embankment into Seventh; that the work done on Seventh street by the superintendent was authorized by the city trustees; and that no protection against the danger was made by the superintendent, though he had actual notice of the dangerous condition. Held, that the superintendent was liable on his bond.

2. SAME—LIABILITY OF CITY TRUSTEES.

The city trustees who appoint the superintendent of streets, being only the agents of the city, and not standing in the relation of principal to him, are not liable under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, pp. 160, 161, c. 153, §§ 22, 23) for injury to a person from a defect in the city, due to negligent performance by the superintendent of a duty resting on him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by Frederick B. Merritt against C. L. McFarland and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants, except Geo. F. Ward, appeal. Reversed in part.

W. A. Purington, Purington & Adair, and C. L. McFarland, for appellants. H. C. Hibbard and Lafayette Gill, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. This action is brought against the city of Riverside, a city of the sixth class, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while the plaintiff was walking along Locust street, by falling over an embankment at the intersection of Locust and Seventh streets in said city. The action is brought against the superintendent of streets of said city, the sureties on his official bond, and the city trustees of said city. Plaintiff had a verdict and judgment. The defendants appeal from the said judgment.

It is contended on behalf of the defendant, the superintendent of streets, T. K. Seburn, that his motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, because it was not shown that any duty rested upon him which he had failed to perform, or which he had performed in a negligent manner. With this we cannot agree. It was shown without conflict, that under his supervision Seventh street at its intersection with Locust street had been cut down so as to leave an embankment two feet in height on one side of said Seventh street. It was also shown, or rather admitted in the pleadings, that Locust street and Seventh street were streets of said city dedicated to public travel, and while there is nothing to show that Locust street had ever been worked as such, the evidence, without conflict, shows that it was traveled as a public street, and further, that plaintiff while traversing said Locust street within the boundaries thereof and in the place where the sidewalk should be, but where no sidewalk was laid, in the darkness of the night, fell over said embankment into said Seventh street. It was further shown that the work so done on Seventh street by the superintendent was regularly and duly authorized by said city trustees. This embankment constituted an obstruction, and, as the result shows, it constituted a danger to public travel. No protection in the way of lights, or in any other manner, was made by the superintendent of streets against such danger. The superintendent of streets had actual notice of the dangerous condition of this street. It was his duty to see that any such danger was remedied, and that the public streets of his city were kept in a reasonably safe condition. The Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 160, c. 153), section 22, provides as follows: "It shall be the duty of the superintendent of streets to see that the laws, ordinances, orders, and regulations relating to the public streets and highways be fully carried into execution, and that the penalties thereof are rigidly enforced. He shall keep himself informed of the condition of all the public streets and highways, and also of all public buildings, parks, lots, and grounds of said city, as may be prescribed by the city council. He shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, give bonds to the municipality, with such sureties and for such sums as may be required by the city council; and should he fail to see the laws, ordinances, orders, and regulations relative to the public streets or highways carried into execution, after notice from any citizen of a violation thereof, he and his sureties shall be liable upon his official bond to any person injured in his person or property in consequence of said official neglect." The following section, 23 (page 161), reads as follows: "If, in consequence of any graded street or public highway improved under the provisions of this act, being out of repair and in condition to endanger persons or property passing thereon, any person while carefully using said street or public highway, and exercising ordinary care to avoid the danger, suffer damage to his person or property, through any such defect therein, no recourse for damages thus suffered shall be had against such city; but if such defect in the street or public highway shall have existed for the period of twenty-four hours or more after notice thereof to the said superintendent of streets, then the person or persons on whom the law may have imposed the obligations to repair such defect in the street or public highway, and also the officer or officers through whose official negligence such defect remains unrepaired, shall be jointly and severally liable to the party injured for the damage sustained; provided, that said superintendent has the authority to make said repairs, under the direction of the city council, at the expense of the city."

That the superintendent had the authority, under the direction of the city council, to do the work on Seventh street, which was the direct cause of the injury to plaintiff, is conceded. It must also be conceded that in doing said work he was proceeding in the line of his official duty and authority. The work was done by him as superintendent of streets. He had actual notice of the existence of the embankment, and both he and the sureties on his bond were equally liable for the results of his negligence in leaving the street in such a dangerous condition.

As to the liability of the city trustees: They are only the agents of the city and as such they appoint the superintendent of streets. They do not, however, stand in the relation of principal to the superintendent, and are not responsible for the faithful performance of the duties of his office. Therefore the verdict and judgment as against them is without support in the evidence.

We see nothing in the point that a public street must be confined to the part of the same which is traveled and worn down by passing vehicles. We understand that all that territory which is platted and dedicated as a public street is within the street, and that the public is entitled to the use of all that territory. But be that as it may, it appears here that the injury occurred at the intersection of two streets and within the boundaries of Seventh street as the same was actually worked and improved by authority of the board of trustees and by the act of the superintendent of streets. This being the case, there can be no question as to the liability of the superintendent.

We have examined the instructions given and refused in the case. We think the instructions given were as full and complete as the nature of the case required; that the instructions refused were properly refused because they did not come within the rules of law hereinbefore referred to; and we find nothing in the appellants' contention with reference to the instructions of sufficient importance to require special consideration.

The judgment is affirmed as against Seburn and his sureties, Davis and House, and reversed as to the other defendants.

We concur: ALLEN, J.; SMITH, J.

PEOPLE v. ERWIN. (Cr. 41.)

1. SODOMY — STATUTES — ATTEMPTS — INFORMATION.

Pen. Code, § 286, provides: "Every person who is guilty of the infamous crime against nature, committed with mankind * * * is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than five years." Section 664 provides: "Every person who attempts to commit any crime but fails * * * is punishable" by imprisonment, for a term not exceeding one-half the longest term prescribed as a punishment for the offense attempted, if such offense is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years or more. An information designated the offense as an attempt to commit the infamous crime against nature with and upon a male human being named therein by then and there attempting to have carnal knowledge of the body of the person named. Held, that the information was sufficient, the crime being described in the words of the statute, and attempts being made a crime by section 664.

2. CRIMINAL LAW — HARMLESS ERROR — SETTING FOR TRIAL—TIME FOR PREPARATION—ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT.

The action of a court on March 3d in setting a criminal case for trial on April 12th following, in the absence of defendant but in the presence of his counsel, is not prejudicial error, defendant having interposed no objection when the case was called for trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1470.]

ALLEN, J. The defendant was convicted of a felony designated in the information as an attempt to commit the infamous crime against nature with and upon a male human, being named in the information, by then and there attempting to have carnal knowledge of the body of the person so named. He appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

Section 286 of the Penal Code provides: "Every person who is guilty of the infamous crime against nature, committed with mankind, * * * is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than five years." Section 664 of the Penal Code provides: "Every person who attempts to commit any crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable, where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempts, as follows: 1. If the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years, or more * * * the person guilty of such attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison * * * for a term not exceeding one-half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense so attempted." The crime charged is substantially alleged in the words of the statute. While section 286, Penal Code, does not define the crime, every person of ordinary intelligence understands what the crime against nature with a human being is. People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 397. The attempt to commit is a crime under section 664. People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 160, 69 Pac. 16, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270. The information is sufficient and the record discloses evidence from which the jury were warranted in their verdict of guilty.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the action of the court, on the 3d day of March, 1906, setting the case for trial on the 12th of April following, although such action was taken in the absence of the defendant, yet in the presence of his counsel. There was ample time for defendant to prepare for trial, and, when the case was called for trial, if he had any objections to the time or manner of the setting of the cause, the same should have been offered. No objections were interposed.

There was no error in the admission of the evidence complained of.

The judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. MELANDREZ. (Cr. 40.)

1. INFORMATION—VARIANCE—GRAND LARCENY.

Notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 487, providing that the larceny of a horse, mare, gelding, etc., is grand larceny, proof of the theft of a mare does not constitute a variance from an information charging the theft of a horse.

2. LARCENY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—EXCEPTION—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Questions as to the ruling of the court in connection with the argument of the district attorney cannot be reviewed on appeal where no exception was taken.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

Where, on the trial in the superior court, there was evidence that a considerable search for a witness had been made in and about places he had formerly frequented, and he had not been found, it was sufficient to warrant the admission of the transcript of his testimony, taken at the preliminary examination in the police court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1236.]

5. SAME—ADMISSIONS.

In a prosecution for larceny of a horse, testimony that accused, in reply to accusatory statements made in his presence by the witness, stated that witness had "thrown him down" and had "given him away," was admissible, though the accused had previously stated that he knew nothing about the horse and had never seen it, until the witness brought it there for sale in the stable.

GRAY, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The information in appropriate language charged the defendant with the stealing of a horse in the county of Riverside, and thereafter feloniously bringing the said horse into the county of Los Angeles. The proof taken at the trial shows that the horse stolen was a mare. The first point urged for reversal is the variance, as to the sex of the animal, between the proof and the information. This question is settled adversely to appellant's contention in the case of People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 52, wherein it was held that the word "horse," in section 487, subd. 3, of the Penal Code, is used in its generic sense, and includes all animals of the horse species whether male or female, and that the Legislature of this state in using the word "mare," also in the same section, did not intend to modify or change the common-law rule, "but inserted the word possibly for more definiteness."

2. Nor can we agree with appellant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. In addition to the evidence showing without conflict that the defendant exercised actual control and ownership over the mare in question in the county of Los Angeles, and that the same had been prior to its being impounded actually in the possession of the defendant in said Los Angeles county, the declarations, conversations, and conduct of the defendant in connection with the disposition of the mare all indicate guilty knowledge and tend to show a consciousness that he had obtained possession of the animal by criminal means. The fact of his guilt does not rest alone upon the possession of a stolen animal, but the fact that the animal was originally stolen and did not stray away, and that defendant was directly connected with the original larceny of the animal in another county, is substantiated by the facts that he sold the animal for almost nothing, that he made a false statement as to the period of time during which he had owned her, and that he admitted that the witness Miranda had betrayed him. In admitting this betrayal he did not deny that he had placed himself in a situation to be betrayed, but all his language and conduct seems to admit his guilt. If we were to concede that the witness Miranda was an accomplice, still his testimony showing defendant's guilt was amply corroborated by the declarations of the defendant himself made in the presence of the officers.

3. No exception was taken to the ruling of the court on any matter in connection with the argument of the district attorney. Consequently we find no error or alleged error in that direction which this court can review.

4. As to the admission of the transcript of the testimony of Canuto Miranda taken at the preliminary examination in the police court, the question of the sufficiency of the preliminary evidence as to the whereabouts of that witness and the efforts that had been made to secure his attendance was in the first instance for the trial court. The record discloses evidence showing that a considerable search had been made for the witness in and about the places that he had formerly frequented, and that the officers had been unable to find him. We cannot say as a matter of law that this evidence was insufficient to reasonably satisfy the trial court that the witness could not be found in the state; and for this reason we cannot agree with appellant's contention that the deposition should have been excluded.

5. The accusatory statements testified to by the police officers as having been made by witness Miranda in the presence of the defendant, taken with the response thereto made by the defendant, were properly received in evidence. In reply to statements of Miranda showing defendant's claims concerning the mare in question, the defendant said, as the witness testifies: "Miranda has thrown me down. Miranda has given me away; and there is two witnesses, so I have no more to say that I brought the horse here." The witness then testifies that he said to the defendant, "Will you go and show me where you brought that horse from?" And the defendant replied, "No; let whoever claims that horse come here—whoever claims the horse come here." To be sure, previous to this the defendant had said to the officer that he knew nothing about the horse, never had seen the horse until Miranda had brought it there for sale in the stable, but his subsequent statements made after he had listened to the declarations of Miranda were in effect a contradiction of his previous declaration, and we are clearly of the opinion that the whole conversation between police officer, Miranda, and the defendant constituted a proper matter of evidence to be submitted to the jury. This is not the case of a mere charge of facts made in the presence of the defendant without any reply thereto, the defendant denying all connection with the alleged crime, but we have here the charge accompanied with a reply in the nature of an admission.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, requiring actions to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, the pledgor of a note is entitled to maintain a suit thereon against the maker, though Civ. Code, § 3006, authorizes a pledgee of an evidence of debt to collect it at maturity, but the pledgee would be a necessary party to the action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, §§ 6-8; vol. 7, Bills and Notes, §§ 1387, 1388.]

4. Pledges—Enforcement of Pledged Note—Bringing in New Parties—Necessity.

Though under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, authorizing the court to bring in necessary parties, the pledgee of a note should be brought in as a party to an action by the pledgor thereon, where the pledgee still retained an interest at the time of the trial, this was not necessary where the note had been transferred back to the pledgor before the time of trial.

5. Costs—Attorney's Fees.

In an action on a note by the pledgor thereof, where the pledgee was not made a party and there was no apparent necessity for the bringing of the suit by the pledgor, it was improper to allow an attorney's fee to the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Henry M. Willis, for appellants. Walter M. Campbell, for respondent.

SMITH, J. This is a suit on a promissory note for the sum of $500, with interest, etc., of date October 24, 1904, payable November 24, 1904, and secured by assignment of five shares of the capital stock of the Redlands Hospital Association of the par value of $500. The complaint, which was filed January 3, 1906, alleges the execution of the note, which is set out at length, and that the same has not been paid, nor any part thereof. There is no allegation that the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of the suit was the owner or holder of the note, but such an allegation was unnecessary. Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 606, 34 Pac. 337, and cases cited. The answer consists of a general denial, which puts in issue only the allegation as to the nonpayment of the note. The court found this allegation of the complaint to be true, and judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiff, March 5, 1906, for the principal of the note, with interest and costs, including an attorney's fee of $50. The defendants appeal from the judgment.

On the pleadings and findings as they stand, it is clear that no other judgment could have been entered. But it appears from the bill of exceptions in the case that evidence was introduced, without objection, showing that, prior to the beginning of the suit, the note had been assigned by the plaintiff to the First National Bank of Redlands as collateral security for $500 loaned him by the bank, and was not reassigned until the day of the trial, and the point is urged by the defendants that the plaintiff had no cause of action when the suit was brought. The position of the appellants is, in effect, that the court should have found the facts disclosed by the evidence, though not pleaded, and, for the purposes of the decision, it may be assumed that it should have done so, provided the facts were material. But we do not conceive this to be the case. The plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of the suit, was still the owner of the note and had a substantial interest therein. The bank, indeed, held it in pledge, and might, therefore, have maintained an action to collect the same. Civ. Code, § 3006. Nor, under the express provision of the Code cited, would it have been necessary to make the plaintiff party. But it does not follow that there was not also a right of action in the plaintiff to protect his rights or interest in the note. Such an action, indeed, could not have been maintained at common law, but, under our practice, "in the matter of procedure and form all distinctions between law and equity" have been abolished (Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 519, 99 Am. Dec. 423), and it cannot be doubted that, under the principles of equity, the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action to enforce his rights or protect his interests. Indeed, the right to maintain an action is given him by the provisions of section 367, Code Civ. Proc. His action, however, could not have been maintained without making the bank, as a party interested, a party, nor, in the absence of the bank—its interest still subsisting—would a court of equity have granted the plaintiff relief. But in such case relief would have been denied, "not upon the ground that the facts [did not entitle him to it], but because all the parties interested in the subject-matter [were] not before the court." Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 521, 99 Am. Dec. 423. Under our system of practice, therefore, the real objection of the defendants to the judgment is "not a want of facts, but a want of parties" (Id.), and had the note still been held by the bank under its assignment at the time of the trial, it would have been the duty of the court, under the provisions of section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have ordered the bank to be brought in. But in this case, as it appeared that the bank had reassigned the note to the plaintiff, this was unnecessary. The facts proved, therefore, were immaterial, and it was unnecessary for the court to find them.

We are of the opinion, however, that the allowance of an attorney's fee to the plaintiff was improper. An attorney's fee can be allowed only for services rendered and for the value of such services. Here the suit was improperly brought in omitting the necessary parties. Nor, indeed, was there any apparent necessity for the bringing of the suit by the plaintiff. Under such circumstances, we think that the court erred in allowing any attorney's fee.

The judgment must therefore be modified by striking therefrom the words: "And in addition thereto the sum of $50, which is fixed by the court as a reasonable attorney's fee herein;" and as thus modified will be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

VATUONE v. CANNOBIO et al. (Civ. 226.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—DENYING LANDLORD'S TITLE.

Lessees or sublessees cannot, in proceedings by the landlord, at expiration of their term, to recover possession, defend on the ground that he had leased the premises to another, they not connecting themselves with the title of such lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, §§ 176, 189, 1276.]

2. SAME—CREATION OF TENANCY FROM MONTH TO MONTH.

Where tenants were in possession under a lease for three years, terminating November 1st, a new tenancy from month to month, at the rate of $300 per month was not created under Civ. Code, § 827, providing that in all leases from month to month, the landlord may, on giving notice at least 15 days before expiration of the month, change the terms of the lease, to take effect at the end of the month, by the landlord on August 24th serving on the tenants three separate but attached notices, the first notifying them that after expiration of the lease under which they were holding the monthly rent would be $300 payable monthly in advance while they continued to hold possession after expiration of their present lease, instead of the sum then paid under said lease; the second stating that their lease would terminate November 1st, and that they would be required to deliver possession on that day; and the third being like the second with the additional clause: "This is intended as a monthly notice to quit for the purpose of terminating your tenancy as aforesaid"—the prior lease not having been a lease from month to month, the notices not being such as to mislead defendants, they having known that the premises were leased from the termination of their lease, and two days before termination of their lease having given notice that at such time they would deliver possession, and when possession was demanded of them on such day having said that they were going to keep the place another month for meanness.

3. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Admission of irrelevant evidence, in unlawful detainer proceedings for holding over, that defendants knew the premises had been leased to another is harmless, defendants' lease having expired, they having no new lease, and not having connected themselves with the new lessee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Unlawful detainer proceedings by Antonio Vatuone against G. Cannobio and another, copartners. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

COOPER, J. This is a proceeding in unlawful detainer to recover possession of the premises described in the complaint, together with damages for the withholding thereof. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendants prosecute this appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The facts are, in substance, as follows: Plaintiff, by written lease, dated November 1, 1901, let the premises to De Carley and Scarsi for three years, the lease to end November 1, 1904, for the rent of $100 per month for the first six months, and $120 per month for the remainder of the term. After the execution of the lease, and more than six months before the expiration thereof, De Carley and Scarsi sold and assigned the same to defendants, who thereupon entered into the possession and occupation of the premises, and so continued in the possession thereof up to the time of the trial. On August 2, 1904, the plaintiff, by lease in writing, let the premises to one Hirsch for the term of seven years from the 1st day of November, 1904, the latter being the date of the expiration of the former lease under which defendants were holding. On August 24, 1904, the plaintiff served upon the defendants three separate notices, each signed by plaintiff and all attached together. The first one notified defendants that, after the expiration of the written lease under which they were holding, "the monthly rent thereof will be $300 in United States gold coin per month payable monthly in advance on the first day of each and every month you continue to hold possession thereof after the expiration of your present lease, instead of the sum now paid by you under said lease." The second notice stated to defendants that their lease would terminate on November 1, 1904, and that they would be required to deliver possession to plaintiff on said day. The third notice was similar to the second, but contained the additional clause: "This is intended as a monthly notice to quit for the purpose of terminating your tenancy as aforesaid." At the time these notices were served on defendants, they knew that the plaintiff had leased the premises to Hirsch, the lease to commence after the expiration of the lease under which they held. On November 1, 1904, the defendants tendered to plaintiff the sum of $300 as rent for the premises for the month of November, which tender was declined. November 3d plaintiff served upon defendants a notice to the effect that their tenancy of said premises had ended, and requiring them to surrender possession within three days. Defendants refused to surrender possession, and this action was commenced November 9, 1904.

The first point contended for by appellants is that plaintiff cannot maintain this action because he had parted with the right to the possession of the premises by his lease to Hirsch. The position is not tenable. It is a well-settled rule, with few exceptions, that a tenant cannot be permitted to deny his landlord's title. Section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "A tenant of real property for a term less than life is guilty of an unlawful detainer, when he continues in possession, in person or by subtenant, of the property or any part thereof after the expiration of the term for which it is let to him, without the permission of his landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be. * * *" The defendants as subtenants were in no better position than the original tenants. They, through their assignors, received the possession of the premises from the plaintiff, and having done so they will not be permitted, while still in possession, without connecting themselves with the title of Hirsch, to deny the plaintiff's title. It does not concern the defendants as to whether the right of possession is in plaintiff or in Hirsch. Their contract as lessees places upon them the obligation to surrender possession at the expiration of the term and to surrender it to the original lessor. Brandt v. Phillippi, 82 Cal. 640, 23 Pac. 122; Commissioners v. Barnard, 98 Cal. 199, 32 Pac. 982.

There is no merit in the contention that a new tenancy from month to month at the rate of $300 per month was created by the notices of August 24, 1904. Section 827 of the Civil Code provides: "In all leases of lands or tenements, or of any interest therein, from month to month, the landlord may, upon giving notice in writing at least fifteen days before the expiration of the month, change the terms of the lease, to take effect at the expiration of the month." The section by its terms is confined to leases from month to month. This was not such lease. And furthermore, the three notices must be read together as one, and when so read they stated to defendants that their lease would terminate November 1, 1904, that they would be required to deliver up possession on said last-named date, and that if they continued to hold possession after the lease should terminate the monthly rental would be $300 per month. Defendants could not have been misled by the notice. They knew that Hirsch had leased the premises. They gave no notice in any way of their intention to claim a monthly lease prior to November 1, 1904, but on the contrary they notified plaintiff on October 29, 1904, that they would deliver to him the furniture in the hotel on said premises on November 1st. When Hirsch demanded possession of the premises on said last-named date, the agent of the defendants in their presence tendered the $300, and said: "We are going to keep this place another month for meanness." To hold that a new tenancy was created under the circumstances of this case would be to attach little importance to contracts. Defendants knew when the lease would expire, and the lease itself was sufficient notice to them that they would be required to surrender possession at the expiration of the time therein named. Craig v. Gray (Cal. App.) 82 Pac. 699, and cases cited. If the defendants had permission from Hirsch to remain in possession, it was incumbent on them to prove it as a matter of defense. The court, under defendants' objection as to its relevancy and competency, admitted evidence showing that defendants knew of the existence of the lease by plaintiff to Hirsch. If it be conceded that the evidence was irrelevant and incompetent, it was harmless. As we have before attempted to show, there was no new tenancy created between the plaintiff and the defendants. Their lease had expired. They did not attempt in any way to connect themselves with Hirsch, or with the lease given by plaintiff to him. In such case we cannot see that it made any difference whether they knew of the lease to Hirsch or not.

Finally the claim is urged that the court erred in finding that the damage caused by the unlawful holding over was the sum of $160, and giving judgment for three times the amount—$480. It is said that the evidence does not support the finding of the court in this regard. The lease to Hirsch included and described the whole building, while the lease to defendants was not of the whole building. The statement shows the following: "It is admitted that that part of building which defendants have is valued at $160." This was at the close of plaintiff's evidence after he had been speaking of the rental in the Hirsch lease being $260 per month. The defendants held over one month, and the evidence supports the finding of the court that the rental value was $160, and the law supports the action of the court in allowing and giving treble damages.

This disposes of all the errors urged in appellants' brief.

POGUE v. BALL et al. (Civ. 279.)

1. Assignments—Assignment of Right of Action—Reassignment—Rights Acquired by Assignor.

A lessor in a lease requiring the lessee, at the end of the term, to leave the premises set with 1,000 orange trees, and to deliver in lieu of missing trees nursery stock, contracted to sell the land and rights under the lease to a third person, who, before the termination of the lease, reassigned to the lessor with accrued damages for breach of the lease. Held, that the lessor could sue the lessee for accrued damages and for damages arising from the breach of the lease in the future.

2. Contracts — Breach of Contract — Actions—Issues—Variance.

The variance between a complaint demanding damages for breach of contract contained in a lease from plaintiff to defendant and the proof that plaintiff's right of action was that of an assignee of the contract by virtue of his contract to sell the premises and the rights under the lease to a third person who reassigned to plaintiff was not material, within Code Civ. Proc. § 469, declaring that no variance between the allegation in the pleading and the proof is material unless it misleads the adverse party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Thomas A. Pogue against B. J. Ball and another. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Roth & McFadzean, for appellants. Bradley & Farnsworth, for respondent.

SMITH, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. There is also an appeal from the judgment, but this was not taken in time, and will not be considered.

The suit was brought for damages for breach of the contract contained in a lease from the plaintiff to the defendants of date February 10, 1899. The lease was for a tract of six acres of land forming a part of a larger tract, for the term ending August 1, 1902, which, it was contemplated by the parties, was to be used for nursery purposes. The terms of the contract alleged to have been violated (changing the order for the sake of convenience) are as follows: (1) "That at the time of the termination of this lease" the defendants were to leave the land "set in orchard form with navel orange trees at the usual distance apart"—which it appears would require 1,000 trees; that in case of the necessity arising to supply any missing or defective trees this "shall be done by said parties of the second part at the earliest date practicable after the execution of these presents;" and "in case one thousand trees may not be left in orchard form upon said land, that said party of the first part shall be entitled to have of said nursery stock the difference between the number of trees so left in orchard form upon said land and said one thousand trees, to be dug and delivered without expense to parties of the second part any time after May 1st, 1901, on request of party of the first part." (2) That the nursery trees within a radius of six feet from the trees to be left in orchard form shall be removed during the summer of 1900, and after May 1st. On the latter point, the finding and judgment of the court was for the plaintiff and are not attacked by the appellants; which leaves us to consider only the first of the breaches assigned. On this the finding of the court is "that it became necessary to supply about 156 missing or defective trees on the parcel of land described in said contract, and that said defendants have failed and neglected to supply the same, or any part thereof, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $468." Judgment was accordingly entered for the sum of $500, with costs.

This finding is not attacked on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it, but apparently on the ground that the decision is against law. This position is based upon the fact that on January 21, 1901, the plaintiff by his contract of that date sold, or agreed to sell, the land in question, with other land surrounding it, to one Goodale, "together with all of the first party's right, title, and interest in and to that certain agreement dated the 10th day of February, 1899," between the plaintiff and defendants, and the argument is that, under the terms of the contract, there was no breach of the provisions of the contract cited until the termination of the lease, or after the assignment. But this position cannot be sustained. It appears that on April 5, 1901, the contract was reassigned by Goodale to the plaintiff, together with all accrued damages, and the plaintiff thus became entitled to maintain his action for such damages, and also for any damages arising from the breach of the contract other than future damages affecting the land, which would include damages for breach of the contract of the defendants to deliver, in lieu of the missing trees, 156 trees of the nursery stock. This was a purely personal obligation in no way affecting the land, and, as we understand the contract, was the only right accruing to the plaintiff for deficiency in the number of trees. The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to recover the amount of damages accruing from this breach, which is found by the court to be $468.

It is, indeed, urged by the appellants that this right of action is that of an assignee of the contract, and that there is, therefore, a material variance between the cause of action set up and the cause of action found. But assuming that there was a variance, we deem it to be altogether immaterial. Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BEATTY. (Cr. 56.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—CONTRADICTIONS IN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—PRESUMPTION.

Where the bill of exceptions states in one place that "the evidence as herein given is all the testimony in the case to support the allegation in the indictment that the girl was not, at the time of the alleged offense, the wife of defendant," and in another place states that "on the trial * * * evidence was introduced * * * in support of the facts, averments, and allegations of the indictment," it will be presumed that there was evidence to support such allegation, even if that in the bill of exceptions does not do so.

2. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

There being no evidence in the record on a prosecution for rape that defendant was married to the girl, an instruction as to her being incapable of marrying if under a certain age was harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

C. D. Cavellaro, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, J. Defendant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment convicting him of the crime of rape, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is contended that the evidence is not sufficient to show that the girl, upon whom the crime is alleged to have been committed, was not the wife of the defendant at the time of the alleged offense. The girl was called as a witness, and testified that she was not married, and that she was not the wife of the defendant. The evidence in the record had relation to the time the witness was testifying; and hence it is said that there is no evidence that the complaining witness was not the wife of defendant at the time of the alleged offense. The bill of exceptions states in one place that the evidence as herein given is all the testimony in the case to support the allegation in the indictment that the girl was not, at the time of the alleged offense, the wife of defendant. The indictment alleges that the prosecuting witness, at the time of the alleged offense, was an unmarried girl "under the age of 16 years." The bill of exceptions in another place states, "that, upon the trial of the said cause, evidence was introduced for the people in support of the facts, averments, and allegations of the indictment." If the evidence of the prosecuting witness quoted in the bill of exceptions does not support the allegation in the indictment that she was, at the time of the alleged offense, an unmarried woman, then the bill of exceptions is contradictory. In case of alleged error, the appellant must make such error clearly appear. In this case the bill of exceptions states in unequivocal language that there was evidence introduced in support of all the allegations of the indictment. If this statement is true, the evidence shows that the prosecuting witness was not the wife of the defendant at the time of the alleged offense. Where the statement or bill of exceptions is contradictory as to the facts relied upon to show error, we must presume in favor of the regularity of the proceedings in the court below. With this rule in view, we hold that the bill of exceptions fails to show that the evidence is insufficient to prove that the prosecuting witness was not the wife of defendant at the time of the alleged offense.

The defendant complains of the following instructions: "The court further instructs you that, under the laws of the state of California, a girl under the age of 15 years is incapable of consenting to marriage, and, if you find that Eliza Davis was under the age of 15 years on the 1st day of September, or upon the 2d day of October, or at any time involved in this case, then I instruct you, as a matter of law, that the prosecutrix was not capable of marrying or being married to the defendant." The instruction could not have injured the defendant unless there was evidence tending to show that the prosecuting witness was married to the defendant at the time of the alleged offense. There is no such evidence in the record.

There are no other alleged errors.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Code, § 1624, subd. 4, requiring agreement for the sale of goods to be in writing unless the buyer accept or receive part of the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, § 175.]

W. S. Wright and M. L. Graff, for appellant. Goldberg & Burke and Earle & Creede, for respondent.

SMITH, J. Appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff and an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. In the original complaint two causes of action were set out. The one for the sale by the plaintiff to the defendant of the furniture and fixtures of a saloon, together with the good will of the business and the license under which the same was conducted, for the sum of $1,300; the other for trespass in the unlawful taking and conversion of goods sold by the defendant and other defendants named. But as to the latter, the suit was dismissed before the trial and the second count stricken out.

The court found the sale of the goods in question as alleged. This finding is fully sustained by the evidence, and, indeed, the sufficiency of the evidence is not disputed, except in one particular, which is that the president of the corporation and his subagents through whom the contract was made had no authority to enter into the contract, or at least, to do so otherwise than in writing. But it appears, without contradiction, that the president was the general manager of the corporation, and that the buying and selling of saloons was part of its ordinary business. There can, therefore, be no doubt of his authority to make the contract. Nor was it essential that the contract should be in writing. The section of the by-laws cited by the appellant—that "it shall be the duty of the president * * * to execute with the secretary * * * and except when otherwise directed by the board of directors, all contracts and certificates of stock that may be executed or issued by this corporation"—does not restrict his powers to the making of contracts in writing. This simply provides for the execution of written contracts, "executed or issued by [the] corporation" and has no reference to oral contracts made by the president as manager of the corporation. Nor was the validity of the contract affected by the provisions of section 1624, subdivision 4, of the Civil Code. The license was actually transferred to Tagal at the instance of the defendant and in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale—which was, in effect, an acceptance by the buyer of part of the goods sold, and there was afterwards, also, a delivery to Tagal as agreed upon. It, indeed, appears that the plaintiff refused to deliver the saloon until the purchase money was paid, but Tagal took possession in the absence of the plaintiff, who afterwards acquiesced in the entry and holding of the saloon by Tagal, and this was, in effect, an actual delivery. The agency of Tagal in taking possession of the saloon appears from the contract as proven.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. BANKS AND BANKING—DEPOSITS — ACTION TO RECOVER—PLEADING.

Where, in an action to recover an alleged bank deposit, defendant's answer denied that it had ever received any sum from plaintiff, except that it sold plaintiff a bill of exchange for $1,000, payable to the order of a third person, and received therefor $1,001, the answer stated a defense, and was not subject to general demurrer.

3. SAME—PRIMA FACIE CASE—NONSUIT.

Where, in an action to recover a bank deposit, plaintiff's evidence, at the time a motion for nonsuit was made, showed that plaintiff deposited with defendant bank $1,000, which had not been repaid, but which defendant at a subsequent time promised to repay when a certain draft was returned, a nonsuit was improperly granted.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against plaintiff, taken within 60 days from the entry of judgment. The only errors relied on for a reversal of the judgment are that the court erred in overruling plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's answer and in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The action was brought to recover of defendant the sum of $1,000. It is alleged in the complaint: "That on said last-named date [August 8, 1903] said plaintiff delivered to and left with said defendant, the Bank of Santa Cruz, said sum of $1,000, in gold coin of the United States of America. That said last-named defendant then and there received said last-named sum of money, and agreed to repay the same to said plaintiff on his order or demand." Then followed an allegation of a demand and refusal to pay. Defendant's answer denies that it ever received $1,000, or any other sum of money, from plaintiff, except that it sold to plaintiff a bill of exchange for $1,000, payable to the order of a third party, one J. R. Helbron, and received therefor $1,001. The answer further denied that defendant ever agreed to pay the sum of $1,000, or any other sum, to plaintiff or to his order. This we think was a sufficient denial of the allegations of the complaint in the face of a general demurrer. (The demurrer to the answer is a general one.) The complaint, it will be observed, does not count upon a dishonored bill of exchange, but seems to attempt to plead a simple deposit with a bank, and a refusal to pay on demand. The demurrer to the answer was properly overruled.

At the trial plaintiff rested his case on his own testimony and an admission by defendant that Wm. T. Jeter was at all times since January 1, 1903, president of the defendant, the Bank of Santa Cruz County. Plaintiff testified, among other things: "I remember August 8, 1903, and of going to the banking house of the Bank of Santa Cruz County on that day, in the bank building—that portion of the bank building used for the transaction of bank business. I handed Mr. Jeter $1,000 in gold coin. That money was deposited in the bank. The bank has never repaid me that money." The above evidence made out a prima facie case for plaintiff, but subsequently plaintiff testified as follows: "Q. Did Mr. Jeter ever tell you he would repay you that money, or the bank would repay you that money? A. Yes, sir. Q. When? A. As soon as he got the draft back." (This is the first reference to a draft in the testimony.) "Mr. Skirm: He said what? A. That as soon as the draft was returned he would pay me my money back; that was the understanding. Q. But the bank has never repaid you that money? A. No, sir." Thereupon plaintiff rested, and defendant moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that it appeared that the money was to be repaid when the draft was returned, and it had not been shown that the draft had ever been returned. Whereupon plaintiff, with the permission of the court, further examined the plaintiff, and elicited from him that the promise to repay when the draft was returned was not made at the time of the deposit, but was made subsequently, in December or January. Thereupon defendant renewed its motion for a nonsuit, which the court granted. In this we think the court erred.

At the time the motion was finally made and granted, the evidence fairly tended to show that in August plaintiff deposited with defendant bank $1,000, which had not been repaid, but which defendant at a subsequent time promised to pay when a draft was returned. No evidence was given explaining in any way the connection of the draft with the transaction, or tending in any way to connect the draft with the original transaction.

A deposit of money with a bank raises an implied promise to repay the same. Coleman v. First Nat. Bank, 53 N. Y. 388; Story on Bailments, § 41. "The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom." Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776; Hanley v. California, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597. See, also, Zilmer v. Gerichten, 111 Cal. 73, 43 Pac. 408. The evidence in this case, as it appears in the record, tended to show a deposit of $1,000 by plaintiff with the defendant bank, which had not been repaid, and upon which the law raises an implied promise to repay on demand. It also tends to show that the defendant, or its president, subsequently promised to repay the money when a draft was returned; but the connection of the draft with the original transaction is not shown by any evidence.

MOODY v. PEIRANO. (Civ. 163.)

1. SALES — BREACH OF WARRANTY — SPECIAL DAMAGES—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, which alleges that the seller warranted the wheat to be "white Australian," but that the wheat was of an inferior variety and produced a crop inferior to that which would have been grown had it been as represented, and that by reason thereof the buyer was damaged in a specified sum, shows a breach of contract of warranty, entitling a recovery of at least nominal damages, as against a general demurrer.

2. SAME—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Findings, in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, that the seller warranted the wheat to be "white Australian," and that the wheat was of an inferior variety and produced a crop inferior to that which would have been grown had it been "white Australian" seed wheat, are sufficient to entitle the buyer to a judgment in his favor.

3. APPEAL—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

Where no objection was made to the evidence, in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, in support of the allegation that the seed wheat sold was of an inferior variety and produced a crop inferior to that which would have been produced from the variety warranted, resulting in specified damages to the buyer, the finding thereon was conclusive on appeal.

4. TRIAL—ORDER OF PROOF—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL.

It is not error to overrule an objection to the testimony of a witness for plaintiff offered in rebuttal that it was not rebuttal; it being in the discretion of the court to permit a plaintiff to offer evidence in rebuttal in support of his cause of action.

5. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION—COLLATERAL MATTERS—IMPEACHMENT.

6. EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1868, 1870 (15), 1958, 1960, declaring that evidence must be relevant to the question in dispute, and authorizing the giving of evidence on the trial of any of the facts from which the fact in issue is logically inferable, etc., it is within the discretion of the court to permit inquiry into collateral facts directly connected with the fact in dispute; and, unless the evidence admitted is without any weight in determining the issue, the ruling of the court in receiving it will not be reversed.

7. SAME.

Where, in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, the seller denied the making of the warranty, and the evidence showed that he had only a different variety of wheat for sale, evidence that he sold wheat during the same season to third persons, and warranted it to be of the variety warranted to plaintiff, was admissible as bearing on the fact in issue.

8. TRIAL—ORDER OF PROOF—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where evidence is relevant in support of plaintiff's claim, the court in its discretion may admit it as direct evidence of the cause of action, or on cross-examination of defendant, or in rebuttal.

See 84 Pac. 783.

HARRISON, P. J. Action for damages for a breach of warranty of the quality of certain personal property. The complaint states that the plaintiff applied to the defendant to purchase from him certain seed wheat of the variety known as "white Australian," for the purpose of planting the same, and that the defendant thereupon sold to him 27,760 pounds of seed wheat, and represented to him and warranted that the same was of the variety known as "white Australian"; that the plaintiff relied solely upon said representation and warranty, and planted the same on his land, believing that the seed wheat so planted was "white Australian"; that the seed wheat so planted produced a crop of about 275 tons of hay; that the seed wheat was not the variety known as "white Australian," but was another and inferior variety, and produced a crop of hay inferior to that which would have been grown had it been "white Australian" seed wheat; and that by reason of the premises the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $3,000, for which he prayed judgment. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, the court having overruled the demurrer, he filed an answer, in which he admitted the sale of the wheat, but denied that he had represented it or warranted it to be "white Australian." The cause was tried without a jury, and the court made findings of fact in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and rendered judgment accordingly. A motion by the defendant for a new trial was denied, and from this order and from the judgment he has appealed.

1. The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. The point relied on in its support is that, if any damages were sustained by the plaintiff, they were special, and should have been specially alleged. The allegation that the seed wheat which was purchased produced a crop of hay inferior to that which would have been produced from "white Australian" wheat showed a breach of the contract of warranty, and entitled the plaintiff to at least nominal damages, making the complaint good as against a general demurrer. McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 461. For the same reason the findings of fact in the language of the complaint are sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment in his favor. The amount of the judgment is to be determined by the evidence offered in support of the averment, and, as no objection was made to this evidence, the finding thereon is conclusive.

2. Upon the trial of the cause Frank Myall was called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, and was permitted to testify, over the objection of the defendant, that the same was incompetent. irrelevant, and immaterial; that he bought some seed wheat during that season from the defendant (shown to be of the same lot from which the sale was made to the plaintiff), and that the defendant represented to him that it was "white Australian" seed wheat; but that, upon planting, it proved to be bearded wheat, and not "white Australian." The defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and upon his cross-examination was asked whether he had sold seed wheat to Myall upon the representation that it was "white Australian." Defendant's counsel objected thereto on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The court overruled the objection, and the witness answered in substance that he had not. The same objection to a similar question, in reference to a sale of seed wheat by him to H. H. Main, was overruled by the court, and the same answer given. After the defendant had closed his case the plaintiff called Main as a witness in rebuttal, and he testified that he had bought some seed wheat from the defendant during that season, and that the defendant had warranted to him that it was "white Australian" beardless wheat. This testimony was received over the objection of the defendant that it was not rebuttal, and also that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The points chiefly urged by the appellant are that the court erred in permitting this cross-examination of the defendant, and in allowing the above testimony to be given by the witnesses Myall and Main.

It is contended by the appellant that the testimony given by Myall and Main, to the effect that the defendant warranted that the seed wheat which he sold to them was "white Australian," was res inter alios acta, and had no tendency to show that he gave such warranty to the plaintiff, and that in receiving the testimony of Main the court also violated the rule that, when a witness is cross-examined upon a matter which is collateral to the issue, he cannot be impeached by evidence in contradiction of his answers on such cross-examination. It is to be noted, however, that the only objection to the cross-examination of the defendant was that the evidence sought was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. No objection was made on the ground that it was not proper cross-examination. The objection to the testimony of Main that it was not rebuttal was properly overruled, if such testimony was otherwise admissible. It is always in the discretion of the court to permit a plaintiff to offer evidence in rebuttal in support of his cause of action. The rule in reference to contradicting the answer of a witness given upon cross-examination which is invoked by the appellant does not wholly preclude such testimony upon collateral matters, if it is relevant to the issue to be tried. It is only when the cross-examination is upon collateral matters which are irrelevant to the issue that the witness cannot be impeached by contradictory evidence. People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 108, 16 Pac. 537; Crusoe v. Clark, 127 Cal. 341, 59 Pac. 700. The rule as stated by Mr. Greenleaf (section 449) is: "A witness cannot be cross-examined as to any fact collateral and irrelevant to the issue merely for the purpose of contradicting him by other evidence if he should deny it, and thereby to discredit his testimony." If the collateral fact is relevant to the issue, it may be shown either by the cross-examination of a witness or by direct evidence thereof. In Attorney General v. Hitchcock, 1 Exch. 99, Baron Pollock stated as the test whether a matter is collateral or not: "If the answer of the witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence; if it have such a connection with the issue that you would be allowed to give it in evidence—then it is a matter on which you may contradict him." In People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452, the court stated that the rule is subject to the qualification that contradictory evidence may be received, if it is relevant to the issue to be tried, and reversed the judgment of the lower court for its error in excluding certain evidence offered for the purpose of contradicting the answer of a witness given upon her cross-examination upon a collateral subject, on the ground that it was upon a matter relevant to the issue then upon trial; and in People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597, after stating the rule, the court said: "But, when the question asked on cross-examination calls for a response in respect to a matter which the party asking the question would have the right to prove as an independent fact, the rule does not apply." Evidence is at all times to be confined to the issue, but "it is not necessary that it should bear directly upon the issue. It is admissible if it tends to prove the issue, or constitutes a link in the chain of proof, although alone it might not justify a verdict in accordance with it." Greenl. on Ev. § 52a. Section 1870 (15) of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes evidence to be given upon the trial of a fact of any other facts from which the facts in issue are "logically inferable." An "inference" is "a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1958), and "is founded upon such a deduction from those facts as is warranted by a consideration of the course of business or the particular propensities of the person whose act is in question" (section 1960 [2]). Section 1868, Code Civ. Proc., declares: "Evidence must correspond with the substance of the material allegations and be relevant to the question in dispute. Collateral questions must therefore be avoided. It is, however, within the discretion of the court to permit inquiry into a collateral fact when such a fact is directly connected with the question in dispute, and is essential to its proper determination, or when it affects the credibility of a witness." The direction in this section that collateral questions are to be "avoided" indicates that they are not absolutely excluded from consideration. Whether the collateral fact upon which the evidence is offered is directly connected with the matter in dispute, and is essential to its proper determination, is by the concluding portion of the section placed within the discretion of the trial court for primary determination. Unless it can be seen that the evidence is without any weight whatever in determining the issue, the action of the court in receiving it will not be reversed.

The tendency of modern decisions is to admit any evidence which may have a tendency to illustrate or throw any light on the transaction in controversy, or any weight in determining the issue, leaving the strength of such tendency, or the amount of such weight, to be determined by the jury; and, in determining the relevancy of evidence that may be offered upon an issue of fact, much depends upon the nature of the issue to sustain which or against which it is offered, and a wide discretion is left to the trial judge in determining whether it is admissible or not. Mr. Thayer, in the introduction to his "Cases on Evidence," says: "No precise or universal test of relevancy is furnished by the law. The question must be determined in each case according to the teachings of reason and judicial experience." And Mr. Stephen, in his Digest of the Law of Evidence, says (chapter 1): "The word 'relevant' means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that, according to the common course of events, one, either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other." Under these principles it cannot be said that the testimony of either Myall or Main was utterly irrelevant to the issue before the court, or that it was not entitled to any weight in the determination of that issue or of the credibility of the defendant as a witness. The issue to be determined was whether the defendant had warranted the wheat which he sold to the plaintiff to be "white Australian," and the court was required to determine the credibility and weight to be given to his testimony denying that he had so warranted it. Evidence of any collateral fact which had a legal bearing in determining these questions was relevant and admissible, and entitled to consideration. The defendant had only one quality of seed wheat for sale. He had received that upon an order given by him for "white Australian" seed wheat, and had been told by the party from whom he purchased it that it was "'white Australian" wheat, and he so stated to the plaintiff and to other purchasers. The plaintiff testified that he warranted it to him to be "white Australian" wheat. The defendant denied that he made such warranty. If now, under this state of the evidence, it could be shown that in all his other sales from this lot of wheat defendant had warranted to the respective purchasers that it was "white Australian" wheat, such testimony would be relevant for the purpose of showing his course of business in selling the wheat, and it would tend to create a probability that he had made the same warranty in his sale to the plaintiff. The number and frequency of the sales in which the warranty had been made, and their proximity in time to the sale made to the plaintiff, would be circumstances addressed to the discretion of the court in determining the relevancy of the testimony; and, unless it should clearly appear therefrom that the court had abused its discretion, its action in admitting the evidence could not be regarded as error. These circumstances would also be addressed to the jury in determining the inference to be drawn from the testimony, or the strength of the probability in support of which it was introduced. The weight or conclusiveness to be given by the jury is entirely distinct from the question of the relevancy of the testimony. If the fact offered to be shown was proper for their consideration in determining the issue, the court was justified in submitting it to them. See People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 476. No personal element, such as the skill, ability, capacity, or financial responsibility of the respective purchasers, entered into the consideration for the respective transactions; and, as the defendand testified that he made the sales to Myall and Main upon the same condition as that made by him to the plaintiff, the evidence offered would at the same time have a bearing upon the weight to be given to his testimony in contradiction of that of the plaintiff in reference to making a warranty. As such testimony would have some relevancy to the issue, it would in the discretion of the court be admissible, either upon cross-examination of the defendant or in rebuttal; and it would also be admissible as direct evidence of the plaintiff's cause of action. In Lowenstein v. Lombard, 164 N. Y. 324, 58 N. E. 44, upon the issue whether a steamship agent had authority to make a contract for the transportation of merchandise without requiring a declaration of its value, evidence that he had made contracts with other parties, dispensing with such declaration, was held to be properly admitted on the ground that it was "competent as direct evidence for the purpose of defining the contract which was actually made."

Probability is an element which addresses itself to the reason, and is frequently invoked in matters of human conduct and experience for determining the existence or nonexistence of a fact. In civil cases a jury is authorized to determine an issue of fact as its probability or improbability may appear to them from the evidence before them. Hence, any evidence tending to show either of these conditions is relevant to the issue to be determined by them. "If the evidence offered conduces in any reasonable degree to establish the probability or improbability of the fact in controversy, it should go to the jury." Insurance Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 438, 20 L. Ed. 197; Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 232, was an action upon a verbal contract between the parties for hauling certain lumber, and the issue before the court was the price for which it was agreed to be hauled. The trial court rejected certain testimony offered by the plaintiff to prove what the defendant paid to other persons for hauling a portion of the same lumber between the same points. Upon appeal the Supreme Court held that the evidence so offered was competent, as tending to show whether it was probable that the price agreed to be paid was that paid by the plaintiff, and should have been received, leaving its weight to be determined by the jury. In an action for damages for fright caused to the plaintiff's horse by the blowing of a locomotive whistle, evidence that the whistle had produced the same effect upon other horses was held admissible in Hill v. P. & R. R. Co., 55 Me. 438, 92 Am. Dec. 601. In an action for damages from fire caused by sparks thrown from a locomotive, evidence of other fires in that vicinity similarly caused is admissible "to show the probability" of the fire in question having been so caused. Sheldon v. H. R. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 218, 67 Am. Dec. 155; Grand Trunk R. R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356; Butcher v. Railroad Co., 67 Cal. 518, 8 Pac. 174; Steele v. Pac. Coast Ry. Co., 74 Cal. 323, 15 Pac. 851. In an action against the defendant upon his promissory note, which the plaintiff claimed to have purchased at a heavy discount, and which the defendant denied having sold, evidence that the defendant had sold other notes about that time at a discount was held admissible. Turner v. Luning, 105 Cal. 124, 38 Pac. 687. In Lexington Ry. Co. v. Lyons, 104 Ky. 23, 46 S. W. 209, upon the issue whether a railroad ticket agent made certain representations respecting a ticket purchased by the plaintiff, testimony of a witness that on the same occasion he purchased similar tickets, and that the agent made the same representation as testified by the plaintiff, was held admissible. In this cause the agent had testified in cross-examination that he did not make such representation to the witness, and it was held that the testimony could be received as well upon rebuttal as in chief. In Schmidt v. Packard, 132 Ind. 398, 31 N. E. 944, where the issue was whether notes in suit had been delivered after their indorsement, evidence that other notes of the same series were similarly indorsed on the same day, and were not delivered to the indorsees, was held admissible upon the ground that the transactions were so connected in time and in language as to indicate that they were the effect of the same cause.

Under the foregoing considerations, we are of the opinion that the evidence objected to by the defendant was not irrelevant to the issue before the court, and that in receiving it the court did not unwarrantably exercise its discretion.

BOUCHARD v. ABRAHAMSEN et al.

(Civ. 254.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 21, 1906.)

1. APPEAL—RECORD—SCOPE AND CONTENTS—OPINION OF LOWER COURT.

An order granting a new trial read as follows: "The court at this time filed an opinion herein in pursuance of which it is ordered that defendants' motion for a new trial be, and the same is, hereby granted." The court, in the opinion referred to, held that the complaint stated no cause of action, and this was the only reason advanced therein for granting the motion. The judge did not sign the order, and the entry in the minutes was made by the clerk. Held, that the opinion was not a part of the order, thereby constituting a limitation of the grounds upon which the order was made.

2. SAME.

The opinion of the court in making an order, although printed in the transcript, is no part of the record on appeal, and cannot be considered by the court in any manner.

3. Same — Questions Considered — Order Granting New Trial—Right to Sustain on Different Grounds.

Notwithstanding the trial court filed an opinion setting forth a specific and erroneous ground as the reason for granting a new trial, the order will be affirmed where the record does not show that other grounds enumerated in the motion were insufficient to support the order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

J. F. Quinn and L. F. Puter, for appellant. Gillett & Cutler, for respondents.

McLAUGHLIN, J. Ejectment. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the court, upon timely motion, made an order granting a new trial, from which order plaintiff appeals. The motion for a new trial was heard upon specified errors of law occurring during the course of the trial, and numerous specifications of particulars in which the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. The order granting a new trial reads as follows: "The court at this time filed an opinion herein in pursuance of which it is ordered that defendants' motion for a new trial herein be, and the same is, hereby granted." The lower court, in the opinion referred to, holds that the complaint stated no cause of action, and this was the only reason advanced therein for granting the motion. Basing their contention on the reference to the opinion found in the order, the attorneys for appellant argue that the opinion must be construed as part of the order, constituting a limitation of the grounds upon which the order was made. We do not think this contention can be sustained. The judge did not sign the order, and the entry in the minutes was the mere ministerial act of the clerk, who certainly had no power to limit the order to particular grounds. But, even if this were otherwise, "the opinion of the judge in making the order is not a part of the order itself, but is merely his reason for making the order, and is not subject to judicial review." People v. Flood, 102 Cal. 331, 36 Pac. 663. Moreover, the opinion of the court, although printed in the transcript, is no part of the record on appeal; and hence it cannot be considered by this court in any manner or for any purpose. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 952-661; Spelling on New Trial, etc., § 693; Chabot v. Tucker, 39 Cal. 434; Davey v. S. P. R. R., 116 Cal. 329, 48 Pac. 117.

If, however, it be granted that the court below confined the reason for granting the motion to the specific and erroneous ground mentioned in the opinion, reversal would not follow unless it appeared from the record before us that the order was not supported by grounds enumerated in the motion. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124; Newman v. Lassing, 141 Cal. 175, 74 Pac. 761; Davey v. S. P. R. R., 116 Cal. 330, 48 Pac. 117. An appellant is charged with the duty of showing error affirmatively, and there is nothing in the record before us to show that the order assailed was not made on sufficient grounds enumerated in the motion.

Every intendment and presumption aids the action of the trial court, and, applying this salutary rule, the order appealed from is affirmed.

Quieting Title—Issues and Proof.

Marcus Rosenthal, for appellant. M. G. Cobb and H. K. Wolff, for respondents.

McLAUGHLIN, J. Action to quiet title to a lot in the city of San Francisco. In her complaint the appellant alleged that the lot in question was formerly owned by the Central Park Homestead Association, and defendants, by competent evidence, established the fact that they are the successors in interest of said association. Notwithstanding the above-mentioned averment appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings in favor of respondents, because no evidence was introduced showing title in the said association. It is an elementary rule that the law neither does nor requires an idle act, and it would certainly be idle for defendants to consume time and energy in proving a fact alleged in the complaint and not denied in the answer. The finding that defendants are the owners of the lot in dispute is also assailed on the ground that the evidence shows that plaintiff had acquired title by adverse possession. There is nothing in this point. The evidence is ample to sustain the findings, and, as this is the only point presented for decision, the judgment is affirmed.

1. Custom—Varying Terms of Contract.

Where one contracts to construct and erect a Scotch granite sarcophagus, composed of bottom base, second base, die, and cap, on a foundation to be erected by him, he, having erected one with the bottom base made of native granite, may not vary the express terms of the contract by evidence of a custom to so make the lower base.

3. Assumpsit—Work Not Satisfying Contract.

Where one contracts to erect at a certain time, or within a reasonable time thereafter, a sarcophagus of Scotch granite, on a foundation to be furnished by him, and a year after the time agreed, without any communication in the meantime with the other parties, erects a sarcophagus, the lower base of which is not Scotch granite, and places it on a foundation, which he finds others are building, he cannot recover on a quantum meruit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

L. T. Hatfield and W. H. Carlin, for appellant. Lawrence Schillig, for respondents.

McLAUGHLIN, J. The complaint in this case contains two causes of action. In the first the appellant alleged the full performance of a contract entered into between the parties hereto on June 2, 1903, by the terms of which appellant agreed, during the month of June, 1903, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to construct and cause to be erected a Scotch granite sarcophagus, or tombstone, with foundation upon or near the grave of Dominick Correll at or near Crafton, Yolo county, for the sum of $450, which sum was to be paid to appellant by respondents upon the completion of the work. In the second cause of action it was alleged that respondents were indebted to appellant in said sum for the reasonable value of work, labor, services and material rendered and furnished at the request of respondents in the construction and erection of a "Scotch Granite Sarcophagus," with foundation at or near said grave. The respondents, in their answer, denied the averments of the complaint and set up affirmative defenses which have no bearing on the questions to be decided by this court. Upon the trial, after appellant had rested his case, the court granted a motion for a nonsuit, and this appeal is from the judgment thereupon entered, in favor of respondents. The bill of exceptions contains the evidence and many specifications of errors of law aimed at rulings of the court in the admission of evidence and in granting the motion for a nonsuit. The last-mentioned specification presents the principal point in the case, which will be first considered.

A motion for a nonsuit "admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against defendants." Hanley v. Cal., etc., Co., 127 Cal. 237, 59 Pac. 577, 49 L. R. A. 597. It is, therefore, apparent that, if there was any evidence which would support findings justifying a judgment for appellant, the nonsuit should not have been granted, and hence our inquiry upon this branch of the case invokes a careful analysis of the evidence introduced by appellant, an epitomized statement of which is essential to the proper understanding of points decided.

The contract between the parties was executed in duplicate, and we can discover no ambiguity in its terms. The appellant therein agreed to erect a Scotch granite sarcophagus, composed of botton base, second base, die, and cap, on a foundation to be furnished by him, during the month of June, 1903, or in a reasonable time thereafter, and the respondents agreed to pay him $450 when the same was delivered and set up. The contract was dated June 2, 1902, and on July 12, 1903, the cap, die, the second base of Scotch granite arrived in Woodland. One Mitchell, who was attending to the matter for appellant, notified the latter of its arrival, and appellant came to Woodland a few days later. Mitchell had the bottom base of Rocklin granite ready, but it proved to be too small, and another was ordered from Rocklin, which was not delivered until October, 1903, about which time some gravel for the foundation was hauled to the cemetery. Between October, 1903, and May, 1904, the ground in and about the cemetery was softened by rain to such an extent that the monument could not be hauled to the cemetery. It reached there on May 2, 1904, and at that time Mitchell found that a foundation had been built upon the grave of Dominick Correll by one Douglass, without the knowledge, consent, or direction of himself or Fish. He had some words with Douglass, who had used a portion of the gravel hauled there in October, and announced his intention to place the tombstone on the foundation so constructed, the cement in which was still fresh and wet. Douglass left the cemetery, saying that he would see the Corrells about it, and on the following day, notwithstanding the protest of a man named Snowball, who said he was a trustee of the cemetery, the stone consisting of a lower base of Rocklin granite, and a second base, die, and cap of Scotch granite was erected on the foundation constructed by Douglass. From the time the contract was executed in June, 1902, until the erection of the monument was completed, no communication, oral or written, passed between the parties. The contract was not altered or modified, and no explanation of the delay in erecting the monument was demanded or made. The testimony shows without conflict that the lower base was, as indicated in the contract, a part of the sarcophagus, and the only reason given for using a lower base of Rocklin, instead of Scotch, granite, was that it was customary to use a base of native granite in the erection of all such monuments.

The foregoing summary of the evidence must inevitably lead an impartial mind to the conclusion that the nonsuit was properly granted. The contract, designated as such on its very face, provided for the erection of a Scotch granite sarcophagus, and both bases were specifically mentioned and their dimensions given. The lower base was placed in the same category with the second base, cap, and die, and no person reading the contract could fail to reach the conclusion that each and every part of the sarcophagus was to be made of Scotch granite. Under the express terms of the contract the appellant had no more right to substitute a lower base of Rocklin granite than he had to furnish a second base, or cap, or die of the same material. It is argued that the custom testified to by appellant and Mitchell justified the course pursued, but the answer to this is that "a usage cannot be given in evidence to relieve a party from his express stipulation, or to vary a contract certain in its terms." Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 371, 33 Pac. 916; Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 597, 74 Pac. 159. The gate to a limitless field for the exercise of chicanery and deceit would be opened if parties were permitted to nullify a contract by evidence of a custom at variance with its terms. It is said, however, that, when a contract is ambiguous, evidence of a custom may be introduced as an aid to the proper interpretation of the terms of the contract. This salutary rule has never been questioned in this state, but it has no application to the case before us. The only ambiguity suggested involves the meaning of the term "sarcophagus," and this to us seems entirely immaterial. The parties to the contract definitely agreed that, in this particular instance, the sarcophagus would consist of a lower base, second base, cap, and die of given dimensions, and this made evidence as to the general ordinary meaning of the word unnecessary and immaterial. Had the contract provided for the erection of a sarcophagus, without further data, such inquiry might have been proper, but the appellant having agreed to erect a sarcophagus consisting of certain parts and stated dimensions, made of Scotch granite, he was bound to prove the performance of such agreement, and, having failed to do so, he cannot recover.

There is another reason for holding that the nonsuit was properly granted. The appellant agreed to erect the sarcophagus in the month of June, 1903, or within a reasonable time thereafter. The second base, cap, and die arrived from Scotland in July, 1903, and the evidence makes it very clear that, if the lower base had been of proper dimensions and material, nothing would have stood in the way of the immediate erection of the monument. There can be no doubt that, if the lower base had been included in the order sent to Scotland, it would have arrived with the other parts of the tombstone. It is equally clear that appellant never intended to supply a lower base of Scotch granite, and hence the delay was caused by his willful disregard of the terms of his contract. That contract has never been performed, and undisputed evidence in this record conclusively shows that appellant never endeavored or intended to fulfill his agreement with respondents. He never made an effort to secure a lower base of Scotch granite. On the contrary, he is here asserting a right to furnish a base of native stone. Under our construction of the contract, his conduct was inexcusable and delay resulting therefrom was unreasonable. But, even if we accept his theory of the case and assume that he had a right to substitute a lower base of Rocklin granite, the delay in erecting the monument stands unexcused. The only reason advanced as an excuse for such delay is that a mistake was made in the size of the lower base which was ready when the cap, die, and second base arrived from Scotland. The dimensions of the lower base were given in the contract, and, by the exercise of ordinary diligence and care, a base of proper size might have been procured as easily as the one which was discarded. The appellant seeks to make his own unexplained mistake a shield against consequences which ordinarily fall upon those who are negligent, but, if this was allowed, a premium would be placed upon carelessness, and all would be invited to commit errors that they might excuse delay. But for this mistake, which seems inexcusable in view of the dimensions given in the contract, the tombstone might, confessedly, have been in place within a few days after the stone arrived from Scotland, and under these circumstances we think the delay was unreasonable and inexcusable.

The appellant could not recover on his second cause of action. He had entered into an express contract to erect a Scotch granite sarcophagus, consisting of two bases, a cap, and die. He did not perform such contract, and it would be promulgating an unjust and dangerous doctrine to say that he could deliberately ignore and violate his agreement by substituting a lower base of native granite, and then recover the full contract price by way of quantum meruit. Without consulting or notifying the respondents when he found that others were building a foundation, he hastily placed an inferior tombstone on the foundation which he did not erect, and, if he has suffered detriment through early dilatoriness and subsequent but tardy haste, he can blame himself alone.

The evidence excluded and stricken out on motion was objectionable, because, as above indicated, it was an attempt to vary the terms of a written contract by parol. It was not error to exclude appellant's definition of the term "sarcophagus." The contract itself definitely described the tombstone so designated, and, besides, a similar question had already been answered by the witness.

JOHNSTON v. MULCAHY. (Civ. 304.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for accounting, evidence held to sustain a finding that there was an agreement between the parties on a certain date as to the amount due from plaintiff to defendant.

2. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—LEASE.

In an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, executed in connection with a lease to plaintiff, testimony as to a conversation after the execution of the lease and contract regarding the theory on which the amount of monthly payments of rent was based was not admissible.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—DECREE—FORM.

In an action for specific performance in which the defendant filed a cross-complaint pleading nonperformance by plaintiff and praying for general relief, the contention that the judgment should have been for a foreclosure as on a mortgage is untenable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Thomas Johnston against James Mulcahy. From a judgment for defendant, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order denying a motion to strike out defendant's cost bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

HALL, J. This case has been up on appeal once before, when a new trial was ordered, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint. Johnstone v. Mulcahy, 132 Cal. 606, 64 Pac. 1077. The case comes before us upon three appeals, to wit, an appeal from the judgment, an appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and an appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion to strike out defendant's cost bill, which are embodied in one transcript.

It appears that plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant May 17, 1878, set forth in two writings. In the first, plaintiff in terms leased certain real estate of defendant for the period of six years, and agreed to pay therefor a monthly rental of $45.07 in advance on the 1st day of each month, and also agreed to pay all taxes, water rent, and for all repairs and expenses for street work of every nature, and to keep the property insured for the benefit of the lessor in the sum of $2,000. In the second writing, executed the same day, it is in terms agreed that, if plaintiff shall faithfully comply with the terms of said lease, and shall further pay to the defendant the sum of $1,350 and interest, according to the terms of a promissory note set forth in the agreement, defendant would convey the property to plaintiff. The note bears date May 17, 1878, and calls for the payment to defendant by plaintiff nine years after date of the principal sum of $1,350, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum from date until paid, and to be compounded semi-annually, if not paid. The second writing repeats the agreement that plaintiff shall keep the property insured for the benefit of defendant and pay therefor, and shall pay the taxes, water rent, and all repairs, and expenses for street work of every nature, upon said property. Both documents bear date May 17, 1878, and are signed by both plaintiff and defendant. Plaintiff's action is for a specific performance of the contract of sale, and for an accounting, he claiming that he had paid more money to defendant than required by his agreement. Defendant answered the complaint, denying performance of the contract by plaintiff, and cross-complained, averring nonperformance on the part of plaintiff, and prayed for general relief. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint.

Plaintiff in his complaint alleges that he has kept all the terms of the said lease, and avers "That on the, to wit, 1st day of September, A. D. 1887, it was settled, understood, and agreed by and between defendant and plaintiff that all the covenants in said lease had been complied with, and that nothing remained to be paid by plaintiff to defendant but said sum mentioned in said note, viz., $1,350 and interest to accrue, and the sum of $200 paid out by defendant for taxes and insurance, and from said last-named date all payments by plaintiff should be applied to said note and interest and said $200." The court found that "On the 1st day of September, 1887, it was settled, understood, and agreed by and between defendant and plaintiff that the amount then owing by plaintiff to defendant, on account of said lease and agreement, was $2,800, and it was further settled, understood, and agreed between them at said time that there was owing from plaintiff to defendant the sum of $200 for taxes and insurance advanced and paid by defendant, and plaintiff agreed to pay said sums, aggregating $3,000 to defendant, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum." Upon the basis of this finding the court took an account of payments made after September 1, 1887, and as a result found there was due defendant from plaintiff $1,734.04, and gave judgment accordingly that defendant have restitution of the premises unless plaintiff pay said sum with interest at 7 per cent. per annum within 30 days from entry of judgment, and that, if such payment be made defendant execute a deed to plaintiff for the property. The finding of fact as to the settlement of September 1, 1887, is challenged as not supported by the evidence, and this presents the principal point in the case, as there is no dispute as to the payments made after that date.

The evidence relied on to support the finding is largely that given by the plaintiff himself. By the terms of the original contract plaintiff should have made 72 payments of $45.07 in six years, but, in point of fact, according to his own testimony, he was nine years in making said payments. Upon this point the plaintiff testified: "Between the years 1878 and 1887 I paid 72 installments in full, but I did not pay them in six years. I paid them within those nine years. All that remained to be paid in September, 1887, was the note and the $200 which he had paid out and which we agreed was due him for money paid out for taxes, insurance, and such things." Upon cross-examination he testified: "Q. You say on the 1st of September, 1887, or thereabouts, Mr. Mulcahy and you entered into an agreement that the installments due under the lease had been paid? A. Yes, sir; and it was so understood; and all that I owed at that time was the note plus $200. I made no calculations, nor did I see any calculations. Mr. Mulcahy told me the note at that time was about $2,800. Q. You assented to that proposition? A. I didn't know any different. I made no calculations. Q. On or about the 1st of September, 1887, you and Mr. Mulcahy had this conversation. Mr. Mulcahy told you that you owed him $200 for taxes and that the principal and interest on the note amounted to about $2,800? A. That is what he told me." Again he said: "He told me at the time that the principal and interest due upon the note was about $2,800, and the amount owing for taxes, insurance, and other things was about $200." On redirect examination plaintiff's counsel asked him: "You were asked whether or not you assented to the proposition made by Mr. Mulcahy to you that you owed $2,800 and $200 taxes. Go on and explain." To which plaintiff replied: "Well, the period for which I ought to have paid on that house, 9 years, had expired. I had only done in 9 years what I ought to pay in 6. This agreement, a copy of which I had, I read over about that time. I saw in that he could enter into possession and put me out of this any time. I hadn't done all that was called for. I knew the position I was in at that time, and I knew I paid him a great deal of money, and I felt no matter what he said to me at this time I had to put up with because I was in the position I could not do anything else."

From the foregoing statement of the evidence given by plaintiff it may fairly be inferred that the parties intended to agree, and did agree, that on September 1, 1887, the amount that plaintiff owed on the note was $2,800, and that plaintiff agreed to pay the same, and the $200 which it is conceded that he owed for taxes and insurance paid by defendant. This inference is strengthened by the fact that plaintiff proceeded to make payments from time to time thereafter which greatly exceed the amount that he could be called upon to pay if his present contention as to the agreement of September 1, 1887, be correct. It is further strengthened by the fact that the original note of $1,350, with interest at 9 per cent. compounded semi-annually, would in fact have amounted to within a few dollars of $2,800 on September 1, 1887, if no interest had been paid. True, the record shows that interest for the first year ($121.50) and possibly one other year, had been paid, but as against this plaintiff had been greatly in arrears in the payments of $45.07 per month, so that defendant would have been entitled to a considerable sum for interest on deferred payments. While the evidence upon which the finding is based is not as clear and explicit as it might be, we cannot say that the finding is not supported by the evidence.

Plaintiff upon the objection of defendant was prevented from proving a conversation with defendant, and this appellant urges as error. The record is as follows: "Q. After the execution of the lease and agreement, did you have any conversation with defendant regarding the theory upon which he fixed these amounts, $45.07? A. I had a conversation with him as to how it was that way. Q. What was that conversation?" Defendant objected as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection as sustained. In this we see no error. The lease and agreement of May 17, 1878, are perfectly plain and unambiguous, and any oral statement made after their execution could not be admitted to vary or change the meaning of the written agreement. Plaintiff did not plead that the writing through mistake did not correctly set forth the contract entered into by the parties, as was suggested that he might do when the case was before the Supreme Court. 132 Cal. 606, 64 Pac. 1077.

Appellant also urges that the judgment should have been for a foreclosure as upon a mortgage. This position is untenable. The cross-complaint sets forth a default of payments due under a contract to purchase, and the findings are in accord therewith. The decree follows the approved practice followed in this state in such cases (Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 Pac. 1109, and cases there cited).

Appellant's motion to strike out defendant's cost bill was made upon the ground that a verified memorandum of costs was not served, although a duly verified memorandum of costs was filed, and copy served, his contention being that the law requires that a duly verified memorandum of costs be filed, and that a duly verified memorandum of costs be also served, and that it is not sufficient to serve a copy of the verified memorandum filed. The record before the court, however, shows that a duly verified memorandum was both served and filed, so that the point urged by the appellant is not presented by the record.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

BIXBY v. BASTADY et al. (Civ. 213.)

1. APPEAL—RESERVATION OF GROUND OF REVIEW—STATEMENT.

Though specifications of the insufficiency of evidence to sustain findings were contained in a separate document from the statement, where they were treated by counsel and the trial court as a part thereof, they were so considered on appeal.

2. SALES—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for the price of a pumping plant, held insufficient to sustain findings that the plant was found on test to conform to the warranties under which it was sold, and that the buyers accepted it as in full compliance with the terms of the contract.

3. SAME—REMEDIES OF SELLER—ACTIONS FOR PRICE.

Where a pumping plant failed to meet the conditions upon which the buyers had agreed to pay $1,600 therefor, the seller could not recover the price.

4. SAME—ACTION FOR VALUE.

Where a pumping plant failed to meet the conditions upon which the buyers had agreed to pay $1,600 therefor, the seller could not recover the value of the plant without showing compliance with the terms of the contract of sale, or the value of the plant actually delivered as compared with that contracted for.

E. F. Hahn and Hahn & Hahn, for appellants. E. W. Forgy and Taylor & Forgy, for respondent.

SMITH, J. Appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The suit was brought to recover the contract price of a pumping plant sold to the defendants by plaintiff's assignor, the Luitweiler Company. The terms of the contract are contained in a written order of the defendants to the Luitweiler Company, accepted by it, of date February 25, 1903, which, omitting immaterial parts, is as follows: "Gentlemen: You will please install on the ranch of E. Bastady at Lamanda Park, Cal., and put in complete running order one of your water pumping plants, complete in all particulars, with all appliances and appurtenances, including the following: * * * All to be installed in good working order by you and at your own cost and expense, and without expense to us, with substantial cement foundations under both engine and pump. It is understood and agreed that this plant shall be of a capacity ample to pump and deliver at least 180 gallons of water per minute, provided that amount of practically clear water is in the well, and not more than 200 feet from the surface, and it shall pump and deliver at surface said amount of water from said well with a fuel consumption of not more than thirteen pints of distillate per hour. In case a test is made and the plant either meets the above requirements or pumps whatever amount of practically clear water is in the well at 200 feet from the surface, we will accept the said plant and pay you for it in cash the sum of sixteen hundred dollars ($1,600) in full for the plant. Plant to be installed by April 1st, 1903." The defendants' answers deny the performance of the contract by the plaintiff's assignor, and assign as breach of the contract that the pumping plant tendered by the plaintiff's assignor has not the capacity stipulated in the contract, specifying the particulars wherein it is deficient. It is also alleged that the contract was rescinded by the defendants, but it is found by the court that the rescission was afterwards waived, and the evidence sustains this finding. The issues to be considered, therefore, are those relating to the capacity of the pump, and as to these the findings of the court (which we number for convenience) are, in effect: (1) That the contract was fully performed by plaintiff's assignor; (2) that the plant was delivered to the defendants and installed in good running order on or before April 1, 1903; (3) that, after the installation of the plant, the plaintiff's assignor caused the same to be tested, and that the same was found to be complete, in good order and of the capacity specified in said contract, and pumped all the practically clear water in said well at a depth of 200 feet from the surface; and (4) that, after the plaintiff's assignor tendered the pumping plant to the defendants on May 20, 1903, as in full compliance with the terms of said contract, defendants retained the same and made use thereof, and that they accepted said pumping plant. These findings are attacked by the defendants for insufficiency of the evidence. But the preliminary objection is made that the statement contains no specifications of insufficiency of the evidence. This contention, we think, cannot be sustained. In the copy of the statement appearing in the transcript, the specifications do not appear, but we have since been supplied with a copy of the specifications, accompanying, though not attached to, the statement, which, it appears from the uncontradicted affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney, were on file at the time of the settlement of the statement and used upon the argument of the motion. The original of this document, it appears, was lost from the records prior to the making out of the transcript, and on the 13th of April, 1906—which was subsequent to the filing of the notice of appeal—an order was made by the court below, "good cause being shown therefor," "that a copy of the aforesaid statement be filed in the records of said case and dated the 20th day of October, 1905, and that the same constitute a part of the record and findings in said action, and also a part of the statement on motion for a new trial." This order, it is claimed by the respondent, in so far as it attempts to make the specifications on file a part of the statement in the case, was beyond the jurisdiction of the court. But, assuming this to be the case (for the purposes of the decision only), the fact appears that the specifications in question, though in a separate document from the statement, were, in fact, treated by the counsel and the court as part thereof, and we are of the opinion that it must, therefore, be so considered.

Of the findings in question, the first must stand or fall with those relating to the particular breaches assigned, and therefore need not be separately considered.

The second finding is without support in the evidence, from which it appears that, though the pumping plant was put in place on or about the 1st of April, it was not put in running order until May 20th, nor was it tendered before then. But, as it does not appear that any damages were suffered on account of the delay, the fact may be regarded as immaterial.

The third finding is, also, we think, unsupported by the evidence. With regard to it, three questions are involved: One as to the capacity of the plant to pump and deliver 180 gallons of water per minute; another as to the amount of water in the well; and another as to the test of the capacity of the plant found to have been made by the plaintiff's assignor.

As to the first question, it appears without conflict from the evidence that the capacity of the plant was much less than 180 gallons per minute. Two of the plaintiff's witnesses, indeed, testify in general terms that the plant had such capacity, but this opinion is based upon the assumption, as stated by them, that every revolution of the pump raises five gallons of water, and the contrary is shown by several actual tests, one of them conducted by the witness Luitweiler, president of the plaintiff's assignor. From these it appears that the amount produced by the pump for each revolution was only a fraction above three gallons, and, as it was proved without contradiction that the extreme rate at which the engine could be run with safety was from 32 to 36 revolutions, the total capacity of the plant was very much less than 180 gallons.

As to the amount of water in the well, the evidence consists of several actual tests or experiments, conducted by several parties. The first of these was made May 20, 1903, by the agent of the plaintiff's assignor in the presence of the defendants; by which, according to the evidence of the agent, it was found that the pump was started at 26 revolutions and operated satisfactorily, resulting in the production of 10 miners' inches of water per minute, equivalent to about 90 gallons; but that when the revolutions increased to about 28 per minute "the sand began to come in quite freely," or, as otherwise expressed by the witness, "considerable sand came in." Thereupon the plaintiff's agent declined to proceed with the test, unless the defendants would assume the responsibility of its running at that rate, which defendants declined to do. The agent then tendered the plant to the defendant Stahlke, who declined to accept it until the plant could show the production of more water. This test, we think—anticipating the third question—was altogether insufficient. The complaint was filed on June 24, 1903. Thereafter, on the 22d day of July of the same year, a further test of the pumping plant was made by two expert engineers, Bishop and Packard, assisted by the defendant Stahlke and one of the defendants' attorneys. The result of this was to show: That the extreme limit of speed at which the engine could be safely run was from 32 to 36 revolutions; that at from 28 to 36 revolutions the water produced was from 104 to 139 gallons per minute; that, except when the pumping began, the water was clear of sand; and that by measurement actually made the surface of the water was about 174 feet from the surface of the ground. Another test was made in January, 1904, with similar results, by expert engineers employed by the plaintiff, Allin and Hodge. There was another test made in the following month by the witness Luitweiler, president of the plaintiff's assignor, accompanied by one of its employés. But their testimony is, we think, quite insufficient to raise a doubt as to the facts established by the previous tests.

As to the fourth of the findings recited, it appears that between May 20th, the date of the tender of the plant to the defendants, and the 22d day of July, the date of the test made by the defendants' experts, the pumping plant was used by the defendants to water some walnut trees, under the advice of their attorney—that "we should use it simply to not let the trees die"; and this, it may be assumed, was sufficient to justify the finding of the court that the plant was accepted. But there is nothing to justify the finding (which seems to be implied) that it was accepted by the defendants "as in full compliance with the terms of said contract." On the contrary, it appears that the defendants refused to accept the plant when tendered, and that they accepted it, if at all, only upon the condition that it should meet the requirements of the contract.

Upon the case thus shown, we are of the opinion that a new trial must be had. By the terms of the contract, as stated in the last paragraph, the promise of the defendants to pay the sum of $1,600 for the plant was not absolute, but was conditioned upon a successful test showing that the plant met the requirements of the contract. The test made by the plaintiff's agent was, as we have said, altogether insufficient to show this, and the contrary was in fact shown by the subsequent actual tests made by the plaintiff's experts. When the suit was brought, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain his action for the specific sum named. Nor can he maintain an action for the value of the plant under the preceding paragraph of the contract without showing his compliance with the terms thereof, or the value of the plant actually delivered as compared with the plant contracted for. On another trial, he will be entitled to recover on such showing the value of the plant, not exceeding the sum stipulated in the contract.

ROWLAND v. WATSON. (Civ. 286.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES—EXTENSION—CONSIDERATION.

Under an agreement between the maker and payee of a note to extend the note for two months and for the payment of "an additional bonus of fifty dollars per month for each month or fractional part of a month which said note shall be extended," the bonus can be collected for only two months, although the holder of the note did not enforce it until some months after the expiration of the extension.

2. PAYMENT — RECOVERY — DURESS — COMPLAINT.

A complaint alleged that defendant held plaintiff's note secured by an assignment of all plaintiff's interests in real property; that the note was extended for two months under an agreement to pay a bonus of $50 a month; that plaintiff had an opportunity to borrow money for the payment of his debts, provided all liens on his property were released, including that of defendant; that one creditor who had a first lien on his property threatened to sell it if not paid by a certain date, but offered to make a material reduction if he would pay; that defendant, taking advantage of plaintiff's distress, declined to release his lien unless paid a stated amount in excess of the amount then due on the note and bonus; that he had no time before the date set by his creditor for payment of his indebtedness in which to contest defendant's claim, and to prevent the sacrifice of his property he paid the amount demanded by defendant. Held, that the complaint stated a cause of action to recover the excess paid defendant, as it was made under compulsion.

H. S. Rollins, for appellant. W. C. Petchner, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. This action is brought to recover the sum of $620.58 alleged to have been overpaid on a note and agreement set out in the complaint. The plaintiff had judgment as prayed, and the defendant appeals therefrom. The appellant contends that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and that the complaint is insufficient to sustain the judgment.

The complaint upon which the trial was had proceeds upon the theory that the defendant by his conduct compelled the overpayment on a certain promissory note of the sum of $620.58. The note, dated April 1, 1903, for the principal sum of $700, drawing interest at 7 per cent. per annum from maturity, is set out in full in the complaint. It is also alleged that on the same date plaintiff and defendant made and entered into an agreement in writing to the effect that, if the said plaintiff Rowland should desire an extension of time to pay the said note, the said defendant Watson would extend said time of payment for two months after August 1, 1903, the date of its maturity. It was further understood and agreed between the parties, as stated in the agreement, that, if such time of payment should be extended, the plaintiff should pay for said extension "an additional bonus of fifty dollars per month for each month or fractional part of a month which said note shall be extended" by the defendant, together with interest on the principal sum of said note and the said bonus of $50 per month at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; it being understood and agreed between the parties that, in case said note should not be paid upon the 1st day of August, this agreement should be and become a part of said promissory note and the security given for the payment thereof. The complaint then goes on to state, in substance, that the security in said contract referred to consisted of an assignment by plaintiff to defendant of all the title and interest of plaintiff in and to the estate of plaintiff's father, which was then in course of administration in the probate court of Los Angeles county, and, except the interest of plaintiff in said estate, that he did not own any other real property; that on December 20, 1904, plaintiff was indebted in various sums, the aggregate of which was in excess of $4,258, all of which was overdue and payment of which was being demanded by his creditors; that one of his said creditors, J. S. Howland by name, held a judgment against plaintiff for $2,312, which was a first lien on the said real property interests of plaintiff; that on said December 20th the utmost plaintiff could borrow on all his earthly possessions was the sum of $4,000 with which to pay off said total indebtedness of $4,258, and that he could borrow said sum of $4,000 only on condition that he should pay off all his said indebtedness, and that said J. S. Howland, after strenuous solicitation on the part of plaintiff, agreed to remit $612 of his said claim if the same was paid by January 1, 1905, but, if not so paid, he stated he would demand payment of the entire amount, $2,312, and would at once seize and sell all of plaintiff's property under a writ of execution; that on or about December 23, 1904, plaintiff negotiated a loan of $4,000 from one Bidart, which sum was on said last-mentioned date placed with the Title Insurance & Trust Company in escrow for the space of 10 days, to be used by said company for the payment of all the indebtedness that constituted a lien upon plaintiff's said property, provided there was sufficient for said purpose, and provided, further, plaintiff could and would mortgage said property to said Bidart as security for said loan, free and clear of all incumbrances. It is further alleged that to and including the 1st day of January, 1905, there was due to defendant Watson, under said note and agreement hereinbefore mentioned, the sum of $879.42, and no more; that said Bidart required a release of all of said liens, including that of defendant Watson, before he would permit any of said $4,000 to be paid said Howland; that said Watson, taking advantage of the distress and necessity of plaintiff's situation, wrongfully demanded of him the sum of $1,500 before he would give or would consent to give a release of his said lien; that plaintiff had no time between said 23d day of December, 1904, and January 1, 1905, in which, by an action at law, to establish the wrongfulness of said defendant Watson's claim; that if said release from defendant Watson was not secured by said 1st day of January, 1905, plaintiff could not give said Bidart a first lien on his said property, and hence could not secure from said Bidart said loan of $4,000, and, furthermore, could not pay Mr. Howland the sum of $1,700, which he had agreed to accept, in which event Howland would have enforced payment of the original sum of $2,312 by forced sale of all of plaintiff's property, and would have entirely bankrupted him; that in order to secure the release of said assignment from said defendant before January 1, 1905, plaintiff was compelled to and did pay to said defendant, on the 27th day of December, 1904, the sum of $1,500, but did so involuntarily and under protest, of which he notified defendant before the receipt by defendant of said sum of $1,500, and that plaintiff had no alternative to save himself from bankruptcy but to make said payment to defendant; that at the time plaintiff paid defendant said sum of $1,500, under protest as aforesaid, there had accrued and was unpaid on said note, and under said agreement, as principal and interest and as bonus for said extension, the total sum of $879.42, and no more; that plaintiff, in the manner aforesaid, overpaid the defendant the sum of $620.58, repayment whereof has not been made to plaintiff, but is refused, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $620.58.

1. Whether the complaint supports the judgment for the $620.58 seems to depend entirely upon the construction which should be given to the contract hereinbefore referred to for an extension of time in the payment of the $700 note. It seems to be conceded by all parties that said contract extended the time for payment of said note for at least two months and attached a penalty or charge of $50 for each of said two months or fraction of month in addition to the regular 7 per cent. interest named in the note. But it is contended by appellant that a proper construction of said contract required the plaintiff to pay, in addition to the 7 per cent. interest, the sum of $50 for each and every month that the note remained unpaid after it fell due according to its terms; and it seems to have been upon this theory that the payment of $1,500 in satisfaction of the note was compelled by him. We cannot agree with this contention. On reading the contract it will be noticed that there was no agreement on the part of Watson to extend the time of payment for any period in excess of two months after August 1, 1903. It must be understood, then, that the agreement related only to those two months, and it was for each of those two months, or for one of those months and a fraction of the other only, that this $50 monthly charge was contemplated by the parties. Immediately at the conclusion of said two months' period the defendant Watson, by the very terms of the agreement, was in a position to bring suit and enforce payment of the promissory note. The time during which he subsequently let the matter rest without beginning suit was voluntary on his part. It was not done in pursuance of the agreement and did not carry with it any right to collect any bonus of $50 for each of the months subsequent to the two months mentioned. This, we think, is a fair construction of the contract, and is strictly in accord with the very letter of its terms; and, this being so, there can be no question but what the judgment for the sum named is clearly supported by the allegations of the complaint, conceding that said complaint states a cause of action.

2. The next question we will consider is: Does the complaint state a cause of action for money paid under compulsion? We think it does. It is clear on the allegations of the complaint that if plaintiff had not paid this $1,500, as required by defendant, he would have suffered great financial loss. Many cases are cited in the brief of the respondent to show that a payment made to avoid financial loss and so made on notice and protest, as it is alleged to have been made in the complaint in this case, is regarded in the law as a payment under compulsion, and where the sum so paid is illegally exacted it can be recovered back. Without citing any of these cases, we deem it sufficient to say that we heartily agree with them, and that in our judgment the allegations of the complaint bring this case in line with those decisions.

3. As to the point made by appellant, that this forced payment was not made direct to defendant, but came to him from the Title Insurance & Trust Company, we think that entirely immaterial. It was money which belonged to this plaintiff. To be sure, it was to be and was in fact borrowed from a third party in this $4,000 loan, but, nevertheless, plaintiff had given security for it, and it was in fact, as well as in effect, plaintiff's money. That it was paid directly by the money lender to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, and went directly from the Title Insurance & Trust Company to the defendant, can make no difference. It was and is the plaintiff's money. It found its way, through some agency, to the defendant, and is now in the hands of the defendant, and belongs to the plaintiff. The judgment in plaintiff's favor and against defendant for that sum was therefore clearly correct.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

STAR MILL & LUMBER CO. v. PORTER et al. (Civ. 293.)

1. PLEADING—IMMATERIAL VARIANCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 469, declaring immaterial a variance between pleading and proof unless it has actually misled the adversary to his prejudice, it is immaterial that the complaint alleges the furnishing of material of the value of $132, on which nothing has been paid, and that proof shows the furnishing of material of the value of $212, on which $80 has been paid.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS—NOTICE—VARIANCE.

The doctrine of variance in pleadings does not apply to a notice of mechanic's lien. All that is necessary as to the statements in such a notice is that they be true in all essential particulars, so that it is immaterial that the notice states material of the value of $132 was furnished, none of which has been paid, when $212 worth was furnished, on which $80 was paid, or that a lien was allowed for only $32; or that the notice states the material was to be paid for at the market price, when part of it was sold at a fixed price, the evidence showing that such fixed price was also the market price.

3. PAYMENTS—APPLICATION.

Under Civ. Code, § 1479 (3), providing for application of a payment in the absence of direction on the obligation "earliest in date of maturity," payments should be applied pro rata on obligations maturing at the same time, though they were not contracted at the same time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Payment, § 124.]

4. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, under the evidence, it appears that respondent was entitled to a mechanic's lien for the whole of his claim, but was allowed one for less, error in applying a prior payment on the item for which he was not allowed a lien, rather than on the one for which he was allowed a lien, is harmless to appellant.

SMITH, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The suit was brought to foreclose several liens for materials furnished the defendant by the plaintiff or the plaintiff's assignors. The judgment and findings with reference to three of these are attacked on various grounds.

The first of these liens set out in the first count of the complaint is attacked on the ground of an insufficiency of evidence to justify the findings of the court as to the contract and notice of lien; and also on the special ground that there is a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the statements of the notice and the facts proven. But we find nothing in the record to sustain these objections.

Another of the liens attacked was that of the O. M. Dunham Company assigned to the plaintiff, and which is set up in the second count of the complaint. With regard to this, the allegations of the complaint are, in effect, (1) that the contract was made by the contractor with the Dunham Company for the furnishing of certain materials "to be paid for at the prevailing market value at said time and place, and to be paid for upon the delivery or the completion of the building, or not later than thirty-five days after the completion of said building"; (2) that the material was furnished in pursuance of the agreement between January 25 and May 16, 1904, and used in the building; (3) that the market value of the material furnished was $132.16, on which nothing had been paid; and (4) that on July 22, 1904, a notice was filed for record by the Dunham Company, duly verified, and so on, containing "a true statement of the demand of said company after deducting all just credits and offsets," etc., "with a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of its agreement," etc.

From the findings of the court it appears (1) that the material used in the building was furnished by the Dunham Company under a contract between it and the contractor, but that of the materials furnished a portion was sold for the fixed price of $173, and the balance, $39, at their reasonable market value; (2) that $80 had been paid on the account, leaving due July 22, 1905, $132; (3) that the notice of the claim was filed for record July 22d, as alleged, stating "the terms, time given, and conditions of its contract, except that it is therein erroneously stated that all of said material was furnished at its market value instead of stating, as in truth it should, that of the materials furnished $173 worth was at a fixed price and the remainder, viz., $39 worth, at its market value, but that said incorrect statement was not made fraudulently, or with intent to deceive"; and (4) as conclusion of law that the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the premises of the sum of $39.

One of the points urged by the appellant is that there is a variance between the amount of materials furnished, $212.16, and the amount claimed in the lien and complaint, $132.16. With regard to the complaint, this is true, though immaterial. Code Civ. Proc. § 469. The court, in effect, finds that the amount of material furnished under the contract was $212, and that the notice of lien contained a true statement of the terms of the contract, except in certain particulars mentioned, other than the one now under consideration. Whether the full amount of the contract price was stated, with credits, or the true amount due after deducting credits, is immaterial, provided the facts were correctly stated. In this respect the case differs from that of Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 381, 51 Pac. 555, cited by the appellant, where there was a false statement of the terms of the contract in this respect.

Another point urged is that of the amount claimed in the lien only $39 worth is allowed by the finding, which is also claimed to be a fatal variance. But we do not understand the doctrine of variance in pleadings to have any application to the notice of lien. In the latter case all that is required is that the statements therein contained shall be true, and if of a claim of $212 or $132 $39 is found to be due, the statement is true to that extent.

Another point urged is that the $80 credit referred to in the findings was wrongly applied, and this, though affecting the judgment only to a small amount, presents several interesting questions. From the bill of goods rendered to the contractor, and appearing in the record, it appears that the credit of $80 was of date February 8th; and it is claimed by the appellant that prior to that date materials had been furnished to the value of $23.04, to which under the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1479 of the Civil Code, the credit should have been applied pro tanto, leaving only $56.96 to be applied on the $173 contract price. But this is incorrect, both in fact and law. The amount of materials furnished prior to February 8th was $17.66, instead of $23.04 as claimed by the appellant, and the rule given in the section of the Civil Code cited is not that the payment is to be applied to the obligation earliest in date, but to "the obligation earliest in date of maturity." Here it does not appear that the purchase money was to be paid on the several items as delivered, and from the form of the account it must be presumed that they all matured at one time; that is to say, upon the completion or 35 days after the completion of the building, as alleged in the complaint, or at some other one date. Accordingly, the payment is credited to the whole bill. All the various items of the account, therefore, belong to one class, and under the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1479, Civil Code, it would seem that the payment should be applied to all items ratably. Under this rule, the amount to be applied on the $173 obligation would be something over $66, leaving only something over $13 to be deducted from the amount of the items allowed.

The court, however, credited the whole of the $80 to the $173 obligation, and this, we think, was error. But we are also of the opinion, that under the facts disclosed by the records the appellant was not injured by it. It is true that the court finds that "of the materials furnished $173 worth was at a fixed price," and as conclusion of law holds that the plaintiff was not entitled to a lien for this portion of its account. But it does not appear from the finding of the court that the price fixed for this portion of the material was not also the market price; and from the evidence in the case it appears, without contradiction, that this was in fact the case. Stevenson v. Woodward, 2 Cal. App. Dec. 777, 86 Pac. 990. The statement in the notice of lien was, therefore, substantially true, which was all that was required to give it validity. Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 107, 37 Pac. 195.

The notice is, indeed, incorrect in stating as one of the terms of the contract that the claim was based upon a quantum meruit, instead of upon a special promise to pay a fixed amount; and this doubtless as a matter of pleading would constitute at common law a material variance, though hardly under existing practice. Code Civ. Proc. § 469. But, as we have already said, the technical doctrine of variance has no application to a notice of lien, where all that is required is that the statement of the terms of the contract shall be substantially true. There are, indeed, many cases cited by the appellant, and other cases, which might be conceived to hold the contrary doctrine. Reed v. Norton, 99 Cal. 619, 34 Pac. 333; Palmer v. Lavigne, 104 Cal. 34, 37 Pac. 775; Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 380, 51 Pac. 555; Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 283, 57 Pac. 1008; Malone v. Big Flat Gravel M. Co., 76 Cal. 580, 18 Pac. 772. But these, or most of them, are distinguished from the present case in that it did not appear that the fixed price stated was the market price. In the absence of this fact, the statement would be substantially false and might mislead the owner to his prejudice. But where the fact appears, no injury can result to the owner; nor can the misstatement be regarded as material. The general effect of the decisions is, therefore, simply to establish the principle laid down in Wagner v. Hansen, supra, which is that a compliance with the statute upon the part of the claimant is essential to the validity of his claim; from which it follows that the statements in the notice must be true "in all essential particulars," and that "there must be a substantial compliance with all these conditions to the right." The case here, we think, comes within this principle.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that upon the evidence before the court a lien should have been allowed for the whole of the plaintiff's claim; and, while on this appeal the error cannot be reviewed, yet it appears, without contradiction, from the evidence in the record that the plaintiff has recovered less than it was entitled to, and that the defendant was, therefore, not injured by the error in the application of the $80 credit.

As to the third cause of action, which is that of a lien in favor of one Cruickshank for materials furnished, assigned to the plaintiff, it is found by the court that materials amounting to $789 had been furnished, of which materials of the value of $42.90 were not used in the construction of the building, and of the remainder a portion was sold at the fixed price of $620 and the balance at its reasonable or market value of $169. It is further found that there was a credit upon the bill of $550.55; and as conclusion of law it is found that the plaintiff has a lien for the sum of $120.10. The objection urged by the appellant is substantially similar to the last of those urged against the lien set up in the second cause of action. But in the case of this lien it is expressly found that the $550.55 was paid on the $620 obligation; and this finding is not attacked in the specifications. This would leave the $169 obligation for which there was a lien unaffected, unless by a deduction of the $42.90 not used in the building, or some other part of it. The amount allowed by the court, therefore, seems to be less than the amount due to the plaintiff.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—DELAY IN SERVING NOTICE—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The discretion of the trial court in refusing to set aside a default in failing to serve notice of intention to move for a new trial within 10 days after the service of notice of decision, on the ground that the party seeking relief was misled by the fact that the notice of decision was interlined in writing upon the printed indorsement upon the memorandum of costs, and that for that reason he did not ascertain, until after the time for serving the notice of intention had expired, that the notice of decision was upon the document, will not be reviewed where the original document upon which the indorsement was made, as well as the interlineation thereunder, was before the trial court for inspection at the hearing of the motion to set aside.

2. NEW TRIAL — NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MOVE — DELAY IN SERVICE — RELIEF FROM DEFAULT.

An application for relief from a default in failing to serve notice of intention to move for a new trial in time, which was not made until nearly a year after the default, was too late to give the court jurisdiction under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., limiting the time within which application may be made for relief from such default to six months from the time of default.

Action by Jacob Steen against Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Company. From an order denying defendant's motion to be relieved from a default, he appeals. Affirmed.

See 79 Pac. 171.

Carl E. Lindsay, for appellant. Z. N. Goldsby and C. B. Younger, for respondent.

HARRISON, P. J. The action between the parties herein was tried by the court without a jury, and its decision in favor of the plaintiff filed and judgment entered thereon December 26, 1902, and on the same day the plaintiff served upon the defendant a memorandum of his costs and disbursements, together with a written notice of said decision, and filed the same, together with the defendant's acknowledgment of service indorsed thereon, in the office of the clerk. The said notice is in the following words: "You are hereby notified that the within memorandum of said plaintiff's costs and necessary disbursements in said action (with a copy whereof you are hereby served) has been filed with the clerk of said court and that said court has rendered its decision herein containing its findings of fact and conclusions of law." The first portion of this notice was printed, and the latter portion was interlined thereunder in writing. To this notice the defendant's attorney had signed his acknowledgment of a receipt thereof. January 10, 1903, the defendant served upon the plaintiff and filed with the clerk a notice of its intention to move for a new trial. The plaintiff admitted service thereof, but reserved in said admission "all objections thereto, particularly that it was not served within ten days after the service of the notice of decision." Thereafter, within the time stipulated by the parties, the defendant served upon the plaintiff its proposed statement on motion for a new trial, to which the plaintiff served upon the defendant proposed amendments—plaintiff in each of said stipulations reserving the objection that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served in time. The matter of the settlement of the statement came on for hearing November 9, 1903, and the plaintiff made objection to its settlement upon the same ground, and, the respective parties having offered evidence thereon, the court held that the service of the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not within the time allowed by law. Thereafter the defendant, having given the plaintiff notice thereof, made application to the court for an order relieving it from its default in serving said notice of intention, and in support of said motion read the affidavit of its attorney and the aforesaid memorandum of costs, together with the indorsement thereon. It was admitted by the defendant's attorney that the notice indorsed upon the back of the memorandum was served upon him personally at his office December 26, 1902, and that he at that time signed the said acceptance of service. In his affidavit he states that, by reason of the use of the blank form which was entitled "Memorandum of Plaintiff's Costs and Disbursements," the interlineation in writing escaped his notice, and that he did not ascertain that there was interlined therein a notice of the decision until January 10, 1903, while he was examining the papers in the cause in the office of the clerk for the purpose of taking steps for obtaining a new trial; "that said interlineation was made in such a manner as to cause the same to be readily overlooked, and by reason thereof he had not before ascertained that such notice was contained in the document;" and that he immediately on said January 10th prepared and served upon the plaintiff's attorney a notice of the intention of the defendant to move for a new trial; that said attorney admitted service thereof, but expressly reserved in said admission an objection thereto on the ground that it was served within ten days after the service of the notice of decision. Upon the hearing the court denied the motion, and the present appeal is from this order. "The rule has been so often declared as not to need the citation of authorities that the action of the superior court upon an application to set aside a default, or grant relief therefrom, rests so largely within its discretion that it will not be disturbed on appeal unless it shall be made clearly to appear that there was an abuse of this discretion." Ingrim v. Aperson, 137 Cal. 370, 70 Pac. 165. See, also, Winchester v. Black and cases therein cited, 134 Cal. 125, 66 Pac. 197.

1. The point relied upon by the appellant is that it was misled by the fact that the notice of decision was interlined in writing upon the printed indorsement upon the memorandum of costs, and that for this reason he did not ascertain until January 10th that such notice was upon the document. The original document, upon which this indorsement was made, as well as the interlineation therein, was before the court at the hearing of the motion, and, considering that the very fact that the notice of the decision was interlined in writing upon a printed document would naturally attract the attention of the attorney to its contents, it may be assumed, in support of the order denying the motion, that the court was satisfied from an inspection thereof that the interlineation was not made in such a manner as to be readily overlooked, but was of such a character as to attract attention, and that there was no reasonable ground for the failure of the attorney to observe the notice of decision written thereon.

2. The notice of the decision of the cause was given December 26, 1902, and the 10 days within which the notice of intention to move for a new trial should have been given expired January 5, 1903. The default occurred when that time was allowed to elapse without giving such notice. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc., limits the time within which application may be made for relief from such default to six months from the time of the default. The application herein was not made until December 9, 1903, and at that time the court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief. Brackett v. Banegas, 99 Cal. 623, 34 Pac. 344. See, also, Latin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317, 30 Pac. 545, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115.

The order is affirmed.

Under Pen. Code, § 1368, providing that when an action is called for trial, or at any time during the trial, or when the defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction, if a doubt arise as to his sanity, the court may submit the question to a jury, and the trial or pronouncing of judgment must be suspended until the question is determined, and section 1373, providing that the expenses of sending the defendant to the asylum and keeping him there and of bringing him back are in the first instance chargeable to the county in which the indictment was found or information filed, where the question of the defendant's sanity is submitted to a jury before his arraignment and he is committed to the asylum, the expense is not chargeable to the county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Action by the Napa State Hospital, by C. B. Seeley, as its treasurer, against the county of Solano. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Stetson, for appellant. T. T. C. Gregory, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover the cost of caring for one John Welch, who was adjudged to be insane. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and it was found that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff in the sum claimed, or any other sum. Judgment passed in favor of defendant for costs, from which, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It appears that in the year 1885 Welch was charged by information, duly filed in the county of Solano, with the crimes of burglary and grand larceny, that on February 12, 1885, Welch "came to the bar of the superior court for arraignment upon said charges," but was not in fact arraigned; "that thereupon, on the 12th day of February, 1885, a doubt having arisen as to the sanity of said Welch, when said defendant so came to the bar of the court for arraignment," the court "ordered the question of the sanity of said Welch to be submitted to a jury, and all further proceedings upon said information were suspended pending the determination of his sanity by a jury"; Welch was found to be insane and the court ordered him to be committed to the Napa State Asylum (now called Napa State Hospital), where he was admitted as, and ever since has been, an insane inmate. The record contains the formal commitment signed by the judge of the superior court, and recites the pendency of the information against Welch and the fact that, a doubt of his sanity having arisen, a jury had by order of the court inquired into the matter and found him to be insane, and directs the suspension of further proceedings under the information, and that he be committed to the State Insane Asylum at Napa.

As amended in 1880, section 1368 of the Penal Code read as follows: "When an action is called for trial, or at any time during the trial, or when the defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction, if a doubt arise as to the sanity of the defendant, the court must order the question as to his sanity to be submitted to a jury; and the trial or the pronouncing of the judgment must be suspended until the question is determined by their verdict, and the trial jury may be discharged or retained, according to the discretion of the court, during the pendency of the issue of insanity." The section prior to 1880 read "indictment," where it was made to read "action." Section 1373 of the same Code provides that "the expenses of sending the defendant to the asylum and keeping him there, and of bringing him back, are in the first instance chargeable to the county in which the indictment was found, or information filed; but the county may recover them from the estate of the defendant, if he have any, or from a relative, town, city, or county bound to provide for and maintain him elsewhere." Appellant contends that section 1368 should be given such liberal construction as would make the county liable where the defendant is committed as insane at any time after the information is filed or the indictment is found against him. On the other hand, respondent contends that no liability of the county accrues except in the case mentioned in the statute, namely, where the "action is called for trial, or at any time during the trial, or when the defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction."

It is doubtless true, as urged by appellant, that after information or indictment, and before arraignment, it would be the duty of the court, if a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant, to suspend further proceedings until the question of sanity has been determined. It was held in People v. Ah Ying, 42 Cal. 18, that, if a doubt arises at any time as to the sanity of the defendant, it is the duty of the court, on its own motion, to suspend the trial or further proceedings in the case at whatever stage the doubt arises. It was so at common law in a capital offense, for it was said that, if insane, the accused "ought not to be arraigned for it, because he is not able to plead to it with that advice and caution that he ought." Blackstone, book 4, *25. But, this duty of the court conceded, we are brought no nearer a solution of the question here. The Napa State Hospital, as its name implies and as is the fact, is a state institution whose expenses are borne by the state. We must look to the statute alone for authority to charge a county with the expense of keeping an inmate in a state hospital. The only statute to which our attention has been called, which it is claimed fixes any liability upon the county, is found in the two sections above quoted. It does not follow, because the court may and should inquire into the sanity of a person resting under indictment or information before arraignment or when arraigned, that a commitment at that stage of the action would cast the burden of keeping the accused at the state hospital upon the county. The Legislature has said that "when an action is called for trial," or during the trial, or when the accused is brought up for judgment (section 1368), the expense of keeping the prisoner, when committed to the state hospital, shall be borne by the county (section 1373). In all other cases we must assume that the Legislature intended that the expense should fall upon the state.

The question then would seem to be: Can an action be said to be "called for trial" when the accused is brought into court for arraignment, but is not arraigned, and at this stage of the proceedings his insanity is adjudged, and he is committed to the state hospital? Under the criminal procedure provided by the Code, when the indictment or information is filed, the defendant must be arraigned thereon (Penal Code, § 976); if for a felony, he must be personally present, otherwise he need not be (section 977); to secure his personal appearance a bench warrant may issue (sections 980, 986); on his appearance for arraignment he is entitled to counsel, and if necessary the court must appoint one (section 987); if, on arraignment, he requires it, he must be allowed a reasonable time, not less than one day, to answer, move to set aside, demur, or plead to the indictment or information (section 990). Many steps may be taken by the defendant to test the validity of the indictment or information and commitment before any trial can be had. To what extent a hearing and order of discharge on demurrer to the indictment or information may be regarded as a trial need not be considered, for that stage had not been reached. We are satisfied that there was no trial in the present case; for no issue of law or of fact had been framed, and, of course, none was heard.

Appellant would have us read the section as though the language "when an action is called for trial" means "at any time during the pendency of a criminal charge." To do this would be to legislate, which is the exclusive function of the Legislature. It may be difficult to advance any good reason for charging the county with the expense of keeping prisoners at state hospitals who are found to be insane when called for trial, and to relieve the county from such expense when they are found insane before being called for trial. If there is injustice in the law, the remedy is not with the courts. In this instance the accused has been at the state hospital for over 21 years and is probably incurable. Whether, in such case, under any circumstances, he should be a perpetual charge upon the county, would seem to call for some more definite provision than we now have in the law.

BARLING v. WEEKS. (Civ. 301.)

1. APPEAL—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULTS.

The setting aside of defaults taken against litigants through their mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect is within the discretion of the trial court, and the appellate court will only interfere where the trial court abused its discretion.

2. PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

A demurrer to a complaint was sustained December 12th, with leave to amend in 10 days. Notice of the order was served December 16th. No amendment was filed within the time fixed. The affidavit of plaintiff's attorney showed that he was led to believe that the notice served upon him was a mistake, in view of what he saw in the offcial organ of the court, and that he employed a third person to investigate the records of the court, who reported that the records showed the demurrer to have been sustained December 17th with leave to amend in 10 days. The affidavit was accompanied by an affidavit of merit made by plaintiff, and by a verified amended complaint. Held, that the court did not abuse its discretion in setting aside the default and granting leave to amend.

3. SAME.

A complaint set forth an action to recover on an implied assumpsit money paid by plaintiff as surety on a note, a copy of which was attached to the complaint. An amended complaint alleged that the note was transferred to plaintiff, and he sought to recover as the owner thereof. The copy of the note as set forth in the complaint did not appear to be indorsed to plaintiff, but bore the stamp "Paid" on its face. Held, that the court, in allowing the amended complaint, did not abuse its discretion, though the cause of action set forth in the original complaint was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1, limiting an action on an obligation not founded on an instrument in writing to two years.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Maurice L. Barling against S. F. Weeks, administrator of S. F. Weeks, deceased. From an order granting a motion to set aside a default for failure to file an amended complaint after sustaining a demurrer, and granting leave to file an amended complaint, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Rothchild, for appellant. Campbell, Metson & Campbell, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order granting plaintiff's motion to set aside the default of plaintiff for failure to file an amended complaint after demurrer sustained, and granting plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint. The motion was made upon the usual ground that the failure to file the amended complaint in time occurred through the mistake of plaintiff's attorney, and it is first urged as a ground for the reversal of the order that the showing made by plaintiff as to the mistake was insufficient to justify the order made by the court.

The granting of motions to set aside defaults taken against a litigant through his mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect lies largely in the discretion of the trial court, and this court will only interfere where it appears that the trial court has abused its discretion. In Watson v. Railroad Co., 41 Cal. 17, it is said: "The exercise of the mere discretion of the court ought to tend in a reasonable degree, at least, to bring about a judgment on the very merits of the case; and, when the circumstances are such as to lead the court to hesitate upon the motion to open the default, it is better, as a general rule, that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the application." See, also, Nicholl v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 Pac. 63; Winchester v. Black, 134 Cal. 125, 66 Pac. 197; Wolff & W. v. C. P. Ry., 89 Cal. 332, 26 Pac. 825; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 308, 61 Pac. 932; Pelegrinelli v. McCloud River Lumber Co., 1 Cal. App. 593, 82 Pac. 695.

The record in the case at bar shows: That after the filing of plaintiff's original complaint a demurrer thereto was filed, but before action thereon an amended demurrer was filed. This demurrer was sustained December 12, 1902, with leave to plaintiff to amend her complaint in 10 days. Notice of the order sustaining the demurrer, with leave to amend the complaint, was served on the attorneys for plaintiff December 16, 1902. The affidavit of Robert W. Campbell, one of the attorneys for plaintiff, shows he is one of the firm of Campbell, Metson & Campbell, the attorneys of record for plaintiff. That on the 5th day of December it was reported to him by one of the clerks of said firm that upon the calling of the demurrer for argument in the court in which the action was pending an amended demurrer was filed, argued, and submitted upon briefs, five and five, plaintiff to submit first brief. Plaintiff thereafter, on December 10, 1902, served and filed her brief. On December 13th affiant noticed in the Daily Recorder, the official organ of the court, under the heading of "Yesterday's Proceedings, Department One of said Superior Court, Seawell, J.," the following: "82661. Barling v. Weeks, Administrator, etc., Dem. to complaint sustained, ten days to amend." That there was also in said Recorder of said date, under the title of "Yesterday's Proceedings, Dept. 2, Murasky, J.," the following entry: "21, Barling v. Weeks Adm., etc., Amd. dem. to compl. ordered off calendar." "That affiant, observing the above-mentioned entries in said Recorder of said 13th day of December, 1902, and noticing the conflicting terms thereof, believed that an error had been committed. That thereafter, on the 15th day of December, 1902, affiant's belief was confirmed by the receipt of defendant's brief in support of demurrer, which was served on said firm on said 15th day of December. That thereafter, and on the 16th day of December, the said firm of Campbell, Metson & Campbell received a copy of the notice of sustaining of the demurrer, with 10 days to amend, said notice specifying that said demurrer had been by the above-entitled court, Department No. 2 thereof, sustained. That affiant, believing that said notice was an error, and that it had been based upon what affiant believed to be an erroneous and incorrect entry in the Recorder of said 13th day of December, caused inquiry and investigation to be made at the office of the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and on the 18th day of December, requested Thomas A. Keogh, one of the clerks in the employ of said firm of Campbell, Metson & Campbell, to make such inquiry and investigation. That said Thomas A. Keogh reported back to affiant that he had investigated the records in said cause, and made in the record book in the office of said firm the following entry: 'Barling v. Weeks, Demurrer sustained Dept. 2, December 17, 10 days to amend.' "

Affiant further stated that he believed the report of Keogh, and that it confirmed his former belief as to the error in the entry in said Recorder of December 13th, and he believed that the notice of the sustaining of the demurrer had been erroneously given; that he was also influenced in this belief by the additional fact that the amended demurrer had been submitted on December 5th upon briefs, whereas the entry in the Recorder with respect to the sustaining of the said demurrer, and also the notice received by affiant's firm, referred to the demurrer of defendant, and not to the amended demurrer. The affidavit was accompanied by the usual affidavit of merit made by plaintiff, and by a verified amended complaint offered for filing.

From the foregoing facts we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in finding that the default was entered through the excusable mistake of plaintiff.

It is further urged that the default should not have been opened, nor leave granted to file the amended complaint, because the same was not in furtherance of justice. The original complaint set forth an action to recover money paid by plaintiff as surety upon a note, although she did not appear to be such surety on the face of the note. The original complaint does not allege an assignment, indorsement, or transfer of the note to plaintiff, but she sought to recover upon an implied assumpsit arising from the fact that as surety she had paid the note. A copy of the note is attached to the complaint, and it appears to be stamped "Paid." A demurrer that the action was barred by section 339, subd. 1, Code of Civil Procedure, was sustained, with leave to amend.

In the amended complaint it is alleged that the note was transferred and assigned to plaintiff, and she seeks to recover as the owner of the note. Upon this theory of her case the action is not barred by the above section, and it is not contended that the amended complaint does not state a cause of action. It is, however, insisted that the amended complaint is inconsistent with the facts set forth in the original, and therefore must be false and sham, and an order allowing the same to be filed would therefore not be in furtherance of justice. Upon this point much stress is laid upon the fact that the copy of the note set forth in the original complaint does not appear to be indorsed to plaintiff, but bears the stamp "Paid" upon its face. This may all be true, and yet the note may have been transferred and assigned to plaintiff. It may have been transferred and assigned by a separate instrument, and the fact that the note is stamped "Paid" is not conclusive on this point. The amended complaint is duly verified, and the motion was accompanied by an affidavit of merit, in which plaintiff stated that she had fully and fairly stated all the facts of the case to her counsel, and after such statement she was advised by them and believes that she has a good, true, legal, and meritorious cause of action against defendant on its merits. We see no reason to hold that the trial court abused its discretion in opening the default or in allowing the amended complaint to be filed.

The order is affirmed.

ARNOLD v. WOOLLACOTT et al. (Civ. 287.)

BROKERS—COMPENSATION—FAILURE TO COMPLETE TRANSACTION.

Defendant, the owner of a building, informed plaintiff, a real estate broker, that he desired a tenant, and stated that plaintiff should bring him an offer if plaintiff could get one. Plaintiff then presented the question to a third person who made two written offers to defendant, both of which were declined, after which the one making the offer told plaintiff that the matter was ended, but, several weeks after such offers had been declined, the one who had made them entered into negotiations with defendant, which resulted in the making of a lease. Held that, in the absence of any evidence of bad faith to defeat the rights of plaintiff to a commission, the facts did not show him entitled to the same.

Action by W. R. Arnold against H. J. Woollacott and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, for appellants. W. P. L. Stafford and F. C. Austin, for respondent.

SMITH, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff with his assignor, as copartners and brokers, procured a tenant for the defendants for the two upper floors of the building in the city of Los Angeles known as "Leonide," and that defendants promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff and his copartner therefor a commission of 1½ per cent. of the aggregate rentals to accrue during the term of the lease, amounting to $378, no part of which has been paid, etc. The court finds these allegations to be true, and also finds the specific facts of the transaction as it understood them. But the case presented by the evidence, in which there is no material conflict, is, we think, essentially different from the case found, and is as follows: The transaction under which the plaintiff's cause of action grew is thus detailed by the plaintiff, referring to his first interview with Mr. Woollacott touching the renting of the building in question, and to a pending offer from another party on which a deposit had been paid: "I asked him if he was in a position to consider an offer from another party, and he said he was. I asked him what rent he wanted, and he told me $450 a month. I told him then I thought the rent was too high; he would not be able to secure it. He told me it might be so, but to bring him an offer if we could get one. I then spoke to him and asked him what commission he would be willing to pay if we were successful in procuring a tenant, and he asked me what we would charge and I told him 1½ per cent. on the entire amount. He said that was satisfactory. * * * I told him I would endeavor to secure him a tenant." Plaintiff then presented the matter to one Grider, by whom the firm had been previously employed, advising him to rent the building; and accordingly two written offers were made accompanied by Mr. Grider's check in each case for two months' rent. The second offer was made May 12th and proposed to rent the building for $372 a month for the year ending January 1, 1906, and $403 per month for the remaining portion of the term. In the concluding paragraph of this offer is contained the statement: "This order is made for immediate acceptance." The previous offer was in the same terms, except the amounts of rental proposed, which were less. When the second offer was declined, plaintiff reported the matter to Grider and returned to him his check. On this occasion he testifies: "I urged upon him to increase his offer. He didn't give me any positive assurance that he would or would not. In fact, he seemed at that [time] rather adverse to increasing his offer. I believe he stated at that time that he had offered all the building was worth." Afterwards, "in the latter part of May or the early part of June," the plaintiff learned that Mr. Grider had leased the building, and thereupon called upon the defendant, Woollacott, who admitted the fact. The date of the lease was July 15th, but the oral agreement for the lease had, perhaps, been consummated some time previously. The plaintiff claimed he was entitled to commission, which the defendants denied. Grider, as a witness for the plaintiff, testifies that when the declination of his second offer was reported to him by Cason & Arnold, "they asked me * * * 'did I want to make another proposition?' They returned the checks. I told them 'No'; I thought I had come up as high as I could on the lease. * * * When they returned the checks, * * * I said in a business way that ended it with me; I had nothing to say, and I immediately figured with Mr. Cason on other property." It also appears from the testimony of Grider, as well as from that of the defendant, Woollacott, that, prior to Wollacott's employment of Cason & Arnold, Grider had examined the building with a view to leasing it, and obtained from Woollacott the terms on which he proposed to lease it, which, apparently, Grider thought were too high. The plaintiff's partner, Cason, was also examined, but his testimony adds nothing to that of the plaintiff. A motion for a nonsuit was made by the defendants on appropriate grounds and denied.

This, we think, should have been granted. There was a proposition upon the part of the defendants to the plaintiff's firm that they would pay the agreed commission upon their procurement of a tenant at the rental of $450 a month; but nothing was done by the plaintiff's firm to meet this proposition. There was also a proposition from the defendants that plaintiff's firm might "bring [them] and offer if [they] could get one." This, if accepted, would have equally entitled the firm to its commission, and accordingly the firm did make to the defendants the two propositions of Grider. But these were finally declined. This, we think, ended the matter. It was optional with Grider to discontinue the agency of the plaintiff's firm, and this he did. It might have been otherwise had an irrevocable agency been given to them. Nor were the defendants at all concerned with the relations between him and the plaintiff's firm. They had authorized the firm to make them an offer. This had been done and they declined it. When Grider came to him, therefore, several weeks after these offers had been declined, unless he had notice of some existing relation between the firm and Grider giving them the exclusive agency for him, they were at liberty to deal with him. Nor is there any evidence, in the record of bad faith on their part, or that of Grider, or of any fraudulent combination between them to defeat the rights of plaintiff's firm to a commission, assuming that it had any. It may be added that, during the period of more than two months elapsing before the execution of the lease to Grider, no other offer had been made by the plaintiff's firm. Nor was it in their power to make a proposition for Grider without his concurrence.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

Action by Tracy N. Stebbins against L. P.

Geo. A. Corbin and A. M. Gates, for appellant. F. H. Thompson, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. This action is brought to enforce specific performance of a contract. Upon the trial, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon certain grounds stated in said motion. The motion seems to have been granted. The only recital in relation thereto that we find in the transcript on appeal is as follows: "Minutes Superior Court. Dept. 2. November 2, 1905. Order Granting Motion for Nonsuit. [Title of Cause.] Defendant's motion for nonsuit is granted and judgment of nonsuit is ordered." The notice of appeal is "from a judgment of nonsuit therein made and entered in the said superior court on the second day of November, 1905, in favor of the defendant in said action and against said plaintiff, and from the whole thereof." We find nothing in the transcript indicating that any final judgment was ever entered in the case, except as above quoted. The order quoted above does not purport to be, and is not in fact, a final judgment in the case, and under the law no appeal is permissible from either an order of nonsuit or from an order directing judgment on a nonsuit. Kimple v. Conway, 69 Cal. 71, 10 Pac. 189. Nor can we entertain an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit where the transcript fails to set out or disclose a final judgment. Granger v. Richards, 126 Cal. 635, 59 Pac. 118. See, also, Estate of Moore, 143 Cal. 493, 77 Pac. 407.

Upon the authority of the foregoing cases the appeal is dismissed.

1. Corporations — Stock — Assessments — Personal Judgment—Recovery.

The liability of a stockholder in a corporation, as well as the right of the corporation, to recover a personal judgment for an assessment on the stock, exists solely by virtue of Civ. Code, §§ 331–349, so that a strict compliance by the corporation with such provisions is essential to a recovery.

2. Same — Time of Payment — Delinquent Sale—Extension.

Civ. Code, § 345, provides that the dates fixed in any notice of assessment or notice of delinquent sale of corporate stock for nonpayment of assessments, published according to the provisions of the section, may be extended from time to time for not more than 30 days by order of the directors, entered on the records of the corporation, etc. Held, that such section did not authorize an indefinite number of extensions, provided each was for a period of less than 30 days, but only authorized extensions for 30 days in the aggregate.

3. Same—Sale of Stock—Waiver—Personal Action.

Civ. Code, § 345, authorizes the extension of any notice of assessment of corporate stock and notice of delinquent sale for not more than 30 days; and section 349 declares that on the day specified for declaring the stock delinquent, or at any time subsequent thereto and before the sale of delinquent stock, the directors may elect to waive further proceedings for the collection of delinquent assessments and proceed by action to recover the amount of the assessment, the costs and expenses already incurred, or any part or portion thereof. Held, that where a corporation, by making several extensions of time to pay assessments, together with the date of the delinquent sale, for a period exceeding 30 days, had lost its right to sell the stock for nonpayment of such assessments, it could not thereafter waive further proceedings to sell the stock and proceed to collect the assessments by suit against the stockholder.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. H. Waste, Judge.

HARRISON, P. J. The plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and on September 8, 1902, its board of directors made an order levying an assessment upon its capital stock, and in said order fixed October 15th as the day on which any unpaid assessment should be delinquent, and November 3d as the day for the sale of delinquent stock. October 13th said board of directors, by an order duly passed and entered upon its records, extended the date fixed in the notice for said assessment to become delinquent until November 11th, and the date fixed therein for the sale of delinquent stock until December 1st. November 29th, by another order, the board extended the date fixed for the sale of delinquent stock until December 15th, and on December 13th again extended the date for said sale until January 8, 1903. Appropriate notices of each of the above orders were duly published. January 8, 1903, said board of directors, by resolution entered upon its records, elected to waive further proceedings for the collection of delinquent assessments upon the shares of capital stock held by the defendant by sale of said stock, and elected to proceed to recover the amount of the assessment by action, and thereupon the present action for such recovery was commenced. At the time of levying the assessment, and thereafter until the commencement of the present action, the defendant was a stockholder of the plaintiff, having 34,920 shares of its capital stock standing in his name upon its books. To the complaint setting forth the foregoing facts the defendant demurred, upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action, and, his demurrer having been sustained, the plaintiff has appealed.

The liability of the defendant, as well as the right of the corporation to recover a personal judgment against him for the amount of the assessment, exists solely by virtue of the statute (Civ. Code, §§ 331–349); and a strict compliance by the corporation with the provisions of those sections is essential to its recovery. Section 349 is as follows: "On the day specified for declaring the stock delinquent, or at any time subsequent thereto and before the sale of the delinquent stock, the board of directors may elect to waive further proceedings under this chapter for the collection of delinquent assessments, or any part or portion thereof, and may elect to proceed by action to recover the amount of the assessment, and the costs and expenses already incurred, or any part or portion thereof." The right of the corporation to recover the amount of the assessment by an action against the stockholder depends upon the condition that it shall have elected to "waive" its right to collect it by a sale of the stock upon which the assessment is delinquent; and if, at the time it elected to proceed by action, it had no authority to make such sale there was no existing right which it could waive. "The term 'waiver,' or 'to waive,' implies the abandonment of a right which can be enforced, or of a privilege which can be exercised; and there can be no waiver, unless at the time of its exercise the right or privilege waived is in existence. There can be no waiver of a right that has been lost. * * * Under a statute conferring a special remedy for enforcing a right, and providing that a party may have a different remedy on condition that he will surrender his right to the first, such surrender must be made while he has the right to enforce the original remedy." San Bernardino I. Co. v. Merrill, 108 Cal. 490, 41 Pac. 487.

Section 345, Civ. Code, is as follows: "The dates fixed in any notice of assessment or notice of delinquent sale, published according to the provisions hereof, may be extended from time to time for not more than thirty days by order of the directors entered on the records of the corporation; but no order extending the time for the performance of any act specified in any notice is effectual unless notice of such extension or postponement is appended to and published with the notice to which the order relates." The date fixed in the order levying the assessment for the sale of the delinquent stock was November 3, 1902, and under this section could have been extended until December 3d. The orders of the board of directors extending the date beyond this were not only without authority, but were in direct contravention of the provisions of section 345. This section cannot be construed as authorizing an indefinite number of extensions, provided each is for a period of less than 30 days, but is to be construed as limiting the right to extend the dates fixed in the order levying the assessment to 30 days in the aggregate. See Cameron v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 129 Cal. 279, 61 Pac. 955. On January 8, 1903, when the board elected to proceed by action, the corporation had lost its right to sell the stock, and with it its right to proceed by action.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOLDSTEIN v. HENSLEY et al. (Civ. 267.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—RESERVATIONS IN DEED.

A contract of sale evidenced by receipt for money recited to be payment on purchase of two lots, "Title guarantied," impliedly agrees that all of said lots shall be conveyed in fee, and is not satisfied by a deed reserving the exclusive right to construct and operate railroads on the streets bounding the lots, and to lay and operate therein and thereon mains, conduits, and wires for gas, water, and electricity.

2. SAME—ACCEPTANCE OF DEED.

A purchaser of land by directing the vendor to make and record a deed does not accept one so made and recorded, but of which he was not informed, making unwarranted reservations.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco. James M. Troutt, Judge.

Austin Lewis and R. M. Royce, for appellant. Welles Whitmore and R. M. Smith, for respondents.

COOPER, J. This is an action to recover damages for alleged breach of a contract to convey real estate. The findings were for defendants, and judgment was thereupon entered. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

There is no question as to the facts that the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of $600 on April 14, 1904, being the purchase price for lots 12 and 45 in block 7 in San Bruno Park, and that defendants agreed to give the plaintiff a deed to said premises. Defendants claim that they did make, execute, and deliver the deed as they agreed to do, and the court found that they did so, and that they complied with their contract. This finding is challenged as not being supported by the evidence, and we are of opinion that the contention will have to be sustained. It may be conceded that the evidence is sufficient to show that a deed was, by the previous request of plaintiff, sent to the county recorder of the county of San Mateo and placed of record, and that, under the circumstances of this case, the evidence was sufficient to show a delivery of the deed which was recorded, but such delivery was not a delivery of the deed called for by the contract, because no such deed was executed. The receipt for the purchase price was as follows: "Apr. 14th, 1904. Received from S. Goldstein the sum of six hundred ($600) dollars, being deposit and part payment on purchase of two lots in San Bruno Park this day sold to him for the sum of $600.00. Title guarantied. Lots applied for, Lots 12–45, Block 7. Geo. A. Hensley, Agent for Hensley-Green Co." This memorandum contained the implied representation that defendants had a good and sufficient title, and that they would execute a proper deed of conveyance transferring such title. The title tendered, under such agreement to convey, must have been free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts, fairly deducible of record, and unincumbered. Without discussing the meaning of the words "title guarantied," it is plain that by it the defendants impliedly agreed to convey a good and sufficient title. It will be presumed that defendants intended, and by implication agreed, to convey all of the said lots and all their interest therein. The deed that was placed of record does not purport to convey the said lots in fee, but reserved certain rights for the use of defendants. The reservation is as follows: "Reserving, however, the exclusive right to construct, operate and maintain street or other railroads through, across, or upon the streets bounding said property, or that may be laid out thereon; said railroads to be operated by such power as to first parties may seem proper; also to lay, operate and maintain through, across and upon said streets, such gas, water and other mains, conduits for electricity, wires or cables as to the first parties may seem proper." This conveyed the property subject to the right of defendants to operate and maintain railroads, to lay and operate gas, water, and other mains, conduits for electricity wires or cables, across or upon the streets bounding the said property. Not only does the reservation apply to the use of the streets bounding said property, but applies to all streets that may in future be laid out thereon. Whether or not the streets, in any event, might be used by public service corporations, or individuals engaged in such business, in supplying the town or the community with necessary means of transportation, gas, electricity, or water, need not be discussed. It is sufficient to say that the reservation in this deed is for the grantors, the defendants here. It is a reservation as to important rights and easements for private purposes. It is a reservation as to land, agreed to be conveyed, that has never been laid out or used as a public street, but that may at some future day be so used. The agreement to convey contains no such reservations, and the deed recorded does not comply with the contract. The finding of the court is not to be given broader scope than the probative facts therein set forth—and hence the deed does not show that a good title was tendered—but, on the contrary, shows a title encumbered by important reservations of rights in the grantors.

It may be conceded that, if plaintiff had accepted the deed, it would have superseded the contract, but he did not accept it. The request to make out a deed and place it of record, if made, was upon the implied understanding and agreement that such deed would convey a good and valid title to the property described in the agreement. Plaintiff cannot be held by the mere fact of the deed being recorded without his knowledge to have accepted the deed, which did not convey the title he bargained for. He went to the office of defendants and made demands for the deed at different times, but did not succeed in securing it. Royce, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, went to the defendants a few days after the plaintiff had paid the money and received his receipt, and demanded a deed for plaintiff. He was informed that defendants would not make a deed under any circumstances, but would fight the case through all the courts. Lewis, the other attorney of plaintiff, went to defendants on another occasion and demanded a deed for plaintiff, but defendants refused to give such deed, and stated that they would not make the deed. Although defendant Smith testified that plaintiff requested defendants to have the deed recorded "and let him know," it does not appear that defendants ever notified the plaintiff that the deed had been made or recorded until after the action was brought. Plaintiff never saw the deed; it was never sent to him or placed in his possession. The first time that plaintiff learned anything about a deed having been made out or recorded was a short time before the trial, when plaintiff's attorney went to defendants' office to see if any compromise could be made, and then defendant Smith said to plaintiff's attorney "I suppose you know about that deed," and then told him that defendants had executed and recorded the deed. Under such circumstances it cannot be held that plaintiff accepted a deed that he had never seen, that did not comply with his contract, that was placed upon record without his knowledge, and of which he had no information until long after this action was commenced. It must be held that the deed was not the deed to which the plaintiff consented that it be recorded, and that plaintiff has never accepted the deed which was placed upon record.

It becomes unnecessary to discuss the value of the property. The finding that defendants "did not refuse to make, execute, or deliver a deed to said property," not finding support in the evidence, necessitates the reversal of the case.

The judgment and order are reversed.

VASEY v. CAMPBELL et al. (Civ. 277.)

REPLEVIN—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

In replevin, the court found that plaintiff was the owner of the property and entitled to the possession thereof. It appeared from other findings that the property was adapted to use in carrying on gambling games, and that it was taken possession of under the direction of defendant as district attorney, that plaintiff was arrested for carrying on gambling games, and that at the time of the seizure of the property one article was in use for gambling purposes, but it was not found that the property was intended by plaintiff to be used in violation of the gambling laws of the state, or that it could not be put to any legitimate use. Held, that the findings as a whole supported a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

Action by M. G. Vasey against J. H. Campbell and another. Appeal by defendant Campbell from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and against such defendant. Affirmed.

J. H. Campbell, for appellant. W. A. Beasley, for Frank H. Ross. Cobb & Rea, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant Campbell from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against Campbell for the recovery of certain personal property, and $1 damages for the detention thereof, and comes to this court upon the judgment roll.

The complaint is in the usual form of an action for claim and delivery of personal property. The contention of appellant is that although the court in express terms found "that the plaintiff is now, and for more than one year last past has been, the owner of and entitled to the possession of" the property sued for, the judgment is not supported by the findings, because from other findings it appears that the property sued for is ordinarily used in playing a banking game prohibited by the statutes of this state. The finding that the plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to the possession of the property is a finding of an ultimate fact, and with the other findings as to the possession of the property by defendant, the demand for the delivery thereof, the refusal to deliver the value and damage are sufficient to support the judgment.

It is insisted, however, by appellant that the findings as a whole do not support the judgment, and that the same should be reversed, because, as it is claimed, other findings show that the property sued for is used for the purpose of playing a banking game prohibited by the statutes of this state, and was taken possession of under the direction of defendant as district attorney. An examination of the findings discloses that it is nowhere found that plaintiff ever used any of the property recovered for gambling purposes, or that any of it was ever so used with his knowledge, or that he intends to so use it in the future, or that it can only be used for such purposes. Thus, while it is found that a bird's-eye ball-bearing wheel "is commonly known as and used as a roulette wheel, and that roulette is a gambling game and a banking game; that plaintiff has used said roulette wheel for other purposes not unlawful"—it is not found that plaintiff used it for unlawful purposes. As to a cardholder, it is found that it "is an ordinary cardholder, capable of being used in numerous legal ways, but is commonly known as and used as a faro bank cardholder."

It is found that a square indicator and rectangular board and composition checks have been and may be used as a faro lay-out in the game of faro; that a certain table "is commonly known as and used as a crap table in the game of craps, which is a banking game, but that said table might be used for any of the ordinary purposes for which any table might be used; * * * that all of said property above mentioned is ordinarily used in playing a banking game or gambling game, prohibited by the statutes of this state, but is harmless when not so used."

The court further found that plaintiff was arrested for carrying on gambling games, and that at the time of the seizure of the property the crap table was in use and the game of craps was being played thereon, but none of the other property was being used, and that at the time of the commencement of this action none of the property was held as evidence or to be used as evidence in any criminal action or proceeding.

Going back to the finding that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property sued for, the question is presented: Do the other findings overcome the effect of such finding? The finding of ownership and the right to the possession of the property is the finding of an ultimate fact upon which the right to recover depends. The finding follows the allegation of the complaint, which is in the usual and approved form for an action of claim and delivery. See Daly v. Sorocco, 80 Cal. 367, 22 Pac. 211; Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 528, 9 Pac. 738. "Findings should state the ultimate facts pleaded, and not probative facts." McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 15, 45 Pac. 14. "The only purpose of the findings is to answer the questions put by the pleadings, and, if facts are stated in the findings in the same way in which they are stated in the pleadings, they are sufficient." Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 44 Pac. 331. Findings as to ultimate facts control as against findings of probative facts. Barraute v. Garratt, 50 Cal. 112; Gill v. Driver, 90 Cal. 72, 27 Pac. 64; Smith v. Acker, 52 Cal. 217; Brown v. Mutual, etc., Ass'n, 137 Cal. 278, 70 Pac. 187. Findings should be construed so as to uphold rather than to defeat the judgment. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257.

It may be conceded for the purposes of this case that if it had been found that the property sued for was intended by plaintiff to be used in violation of the gambling laws of the state, and that it could not be put to any legitimate use, replevin would not lie for the recovery thereof. Board of Police Com'rs, etc., v. Wagner (Md.) 48 Atl. 455, 52 L. R. A. 775, 86 Am. St. Rep. 423. But applying the principles above set forth concerning the interpretation of findings we have no such case. In the face of the express finding that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property sued for, we cannot infer from the finding that the property is commonly used for unlawful gambling, and that a part was being so used when seized by defendant's order; that plaintiff ever so used it, or intends to so use it; or that it cannot be used for lawful purposes. The finding that the articles are commonly used for unlawful gambling purposes suggests the inference that plaintiff seeks the possession of the property with the object of using it for such purposes, and together with other evidence would have justified a finding to that effect by the trial court. But we cannot indulge in such inferences in the face of the express finding of the ultimate fact that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property sued for.

HUMBURG v. LOTZ. (Civ. 262.)

1. Joint Adventures—Mutual Rights and Duties.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 2411, 2228, respectively, prohibiting partners and trustees from obtaining any advantage over their partners and beneficiaries by misrepresentation or concealment, where defendant obtained property which was turned into an enterprise formed jointly with plaintiff for $5,000, but represented to plaintiff that it cost $8,000, plaintiff, having contributed to the enterprise on that theory, could, upon discovering the concealment, recover one-half of the $3,000; it being immaterial whether plaintiff was injured financially or not.

2. Same—Immateriality of Relationship.

In an action to recover one-half of a $3,000 advantage defendant obtained over plaintiff by concealment in the purchase of property used in a joint enterprise, it was immaterial to plaintiff's right of recovery whether the relationship between them was technically a partnership or not.

3. Same—Action Between Parties—Findings—Sufficiency.

Where, in an action to recover one-half of a $3,000 advantage obtained by defendant over plaintiff by concealment in the purchase of property used in a joint enterprise, defendant answered that, being the owner of an option to purchase the property, he bargained with plaintiff to sell an undivided one-half interest in the property for $4,000, the court's finding that the parties agreed to purchase the property of the owner was, in effect, a finding against such allegation.

4. Same—Defenses.

In an action to recover one-half of a $3,000 advantage obtained by defendant over plaintiff by concealment in the purchase of property used in a joint enterprise, it was immaterial to plaintiff's right of recovery that he and defendant had formed a corporation to conduct the enterprise after the purchase of the property, and that plaintiff sold his shares at a profit.

5. Same—Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action to recover one-half of a $3,000 advantage obtained by defendant over plaintiff by concealment in the purchase of property used in a joint enterprise, it was material to show whether or not plaintiff would have gone into the enterprise had he known defendant was receiving a $3,000 advantage in the transaction.

C. T. Bird and Charles Clark, for appellant. Jackson Hatch, for respondent.

COOPER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The facts, as shown by the findings and the evidence, are substantially as follows: Defendant is a brother of Augustus Lotz, who was during the years 1903 and 1904 the president of the "Sanitary Compressed Air & Suction Dust Removing Company," a corporation doing business in California, and which was at the times herein named the owner of certain letters patent for certain automatic air dust-removing and cleaning devices, and portable wagons, used in its business. In the early part of the year 1903 the said corporation agreed with defendant that he should have the exclusive right to purchase and sell the said letters patent, and the devices and portable wagon in connection therewith, in the territory covered by the county of Santa Clara, for the sum of $8,000, out of which defendant was to be paid a commission of $3,000, making the net price to defendant of $5,000, and this arrangement was in force at all the times the defendant was negotiating with plaintiff. Plaintiff and defendant had known each other for many years, and during such time had been upon friendly terms, and plaintiff had faith and confidence in the honesty, integrity, and friendship of the defendant.

In the month of September, 1903, plaintiff was engaged, and for a long time prior thereto had been engaged, in the business of beating and cleaning carpets in the city of San José, and had a fixed place of business in said city, with a plant and necessary appliances therefor, of the value of $3,000. About this time the defendant, without informing plaintiff anything about his arrangement and contract with the corporation of which his brother was president, went to plaintiff and told him of the merits of the patent and devices of the corporation, and that they were the best and most practical and valuable of such rights and devices. Defendant further told plaintiff that because of the fact that his brother was the president of the corporation he (the defendant) could purchase the patent for Santa Clara county and the devices upon very favorable terms. After several interviews the defendant informed plaintiff that the said patent right and appliances could be purchased for Santa Clara county for $8,000. Plaintiff did not know of the fact that the defendant had an arrangement by which he could purchase the letters patent and devices for $5,000, and had no means of knowing such fact, but relied solely upon the statements and representations made to him by defendant. The result of the interviews was that plaintiff and defendant agreed that they would jointly purchase the letters patent and devices for $8,000, and also the plaintiff's plant at its value, $3,000, making $11,000, and that each should become the owner of and pay for an undivided one-half thereof, $5,500. The plaintiff turned over his plant at its valuation and paid the balance, $2,500. The defendant only paid in $2,500 and not $5,500, and the sum of $5,000 was all that was paid to the corporation for the letters patent and devices.

When the plaintiff and defendant agreed to purchase the letters patent and devices from the corporation for $8,000, they entered into and signed contracts by which they agreed to pay said $8,000 according to the terms of the contracts. The account of sale was kept by the corporation, and the patents and devices charged at the sum of $8,000 to plaintiff and defendant jointly. The corporation, in entering the credit of $3,000, entered it as follows: "Commission account debtor to Joseph A. Lotz and Henry Humburg $3,000." After the purchase of the said letters patent and devices and the plant of plaintiff, the plaintiff and defendant began and for a time carried on the business together in the city of San José. The plaintiff did not discover the fact that defendant had only paid in $2,500, nor the fact that the amount paid to the corporation for the letters patent and devices was only $5,000, until long after the said amounts had been paid and the plaintiff and defendant had been in business together. The defendant concealed the fact from the plaintiff that he could purchase the letters patent and devices for $5,000, and by such concealment procured the plaintiff to pay $3,000 more into the business than the defendant paid. The defendant in his own testimony says: "I did not tell Mr. Humburg about this $3,000 commission to me. * * *" When asked in cross-examination why he did not tell plaintiff about the $3,000 commission, defendant replied: "It was none of his business, nor anybody's business. If I had the option, and I wanted to sell it for $10,000 or $20,000, it was not anybody's business whether I paid $1 or $5 for it. * * * I virtually led him to believe that I was going to put into it the same amount that he did. * * * I did not tell Humburg at the time about my credit of $3,000 because it was not any of his business particularly. I took care of the balance of the money, and if I got a credit by commission for services rendered that was a payment. * * * I told him about October 12th that there was paid $8,000." He further testified, in speaking of the price paid to the corporation: "They agreed to let it go to me at $5,000, and I sold it for $8,000." The defendant declined to repay to the plaintiff one-half of the excess paid by plaintiff into the business, and hence this action.

Upon the findings judgment was entered for plaintiff for the sum of $1,500, and we are of the opinion that the judgment is correct. Upon plain principles of common honesty the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Defendant was entering into a business arrangement with his friend, and he knew that his friend believed they were going in on equal terms. He informed the plaintiff that he could make the purchase of the letters patent and devices upon favorable terms for the reason that his brother was president of the corporation. Defendant did not disclose the true facts to plaintiff. Honesty and fair dealing required that he should have done so. When the plaintiff and defendant agreed to enter into the common enterprise together, each one became the agent of the other in regard to the purchase of the property and the management of the business. They occupied fiduciary relations to each other, and neither one could take advantage of the other for his own benefit by dealings in the name of both and in furtherance of the common enterprise. Defendant was bound to act in the highest good faith to plaintiff. He will not be allowed to obtain any advantage over him by misrepresentation or concealment. Civ. Code, §§ 2411, 2228; King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628; Richards v. Fraser, 122 Cal. 460, 55 Pac. 246.

It is urged by appellant that the plaintiff cannot recover, because he has not shown that he suffered any financial injury by reason of the matters alleged and found. He did suffer damage by reason of the fact that he paid $1,500 more than he would have been required to pay if defendant had paid his just part of the purchase price. But aside from this the proposition is without merit. A person standing in a relation of trust and confidence with another will not be upheld in violating his trust to his own benefit because the entire trust transaction did not injure the party whose trust has been betrayed in the particular transaction. Each party in such case has the right to enjoy his proportion of the benefit of a bargain made by either. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 Pac. 486.

The findings support the judgment. While they are very full, and contain some unessential matters, we conclude, after a careful examination, that all the material portions of them are supported by the evidence. It was not necessary for the court to find in express terms upon the issue made by the pleadings to the effect that plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement, by the terms of which they were to become copartners. The finding of the probative facts shows the position they occupied towards each other in the transaction, and whether they were copartners in the technical sense is immaterial. The answer contained the following averment: "That on or about December 18, 1903, this defendant, being the owner and holder of said option, as aforesaid, bargained with and agreed to sell to Henry Humburg, plaintiff herein, for the sum of $4,000, an undivided one-half interest in and to said patent right to use said devices and portable plant in Santa Clara county." Complaint is made that there is no finding upon this allegation. Upon an examination of the findings we are of opinion that they in effect find against defendant on the allegation. The court found that the plaintiff and defendant agreed, by virtue of certain written contracts, to purchase of the corporation the letters patent and devices. This is inconsistent with and negatives the allegation of the answer referred to.

The allegation in the answer as to a transfer and sale of stock by plaintiff in a corporation that had been created was wholly immaterial. The fact, if true, that plaintiff and defendant formed a corporation to conduct the business after the purchase, and that plaintiff sold his shares at a profit, would not justify the defendant in keeping the $1,500 which in justice he owes to the plaintiff.

In direct examination the plaintiff was asked by his counsel the following question: "Q. If you had known that he had a credit of $3,000 at the time and was to pay $2,500 only, would you have gone into the arrangement?" Defendant claims that the court erroneously overruled his objection to the question. We find by an examination of the record that the question was not objected to until after the witness had answered, and then no motion was made to strike out the answer. The question was then objected to upon the sole ground that it was immaterial. The subject-matter of the question was certainly material. It was material to know whether or not the plaintiff would have gone into the arrangement if he had known that defendant was taking advantage of him to the extent of $1,500. There was no error in the ruling.

1. SALES — CONDITIONAL SALES — CONSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE.

Whether the parties to a transfer of personal property, the title to which does not pass until the purchase price is paid, intended to make a sale, in the absence of evidence of subsequent conduct of the parties, must be ascertained from the terms of the instrument.

2. PLEADING—ANSWER—SEPARATE DEFENSES —COUNTERCLAIM.

In an answer setting up separate defenses and a counterclaim, the sufficiency of each defense as well as the counterclaim is to be determined without reference to matters elsewhere set forth in the answer, unless connected therewith by direct reference.

3. BAILMENT—ACTIONS—PLEADING—DEFENSE.

In an action to recover for machinery transferred under an instrument specifying a certain sum for use of the property and another sum for which it might be purchased after payment of the rent, the answer admitted the allegations of the complaint, but alleged that the instrument was executed and possession taken under a warranty that the machinery had a certain capacity which it did not have; that the agreement to take and pay for it was in consideration of such warranty; that it was not fit for the purposes for which it was purchased, and has always been useless; and that on ascertaining such facts an offer to return it was immediately made. Held not to constitute a defense, as the admission did not give a construction to the instrument different from that derived from its language, and the allegations as to warranty and purchase were by way of recital, and those as to ascertaining defects and offer to return were uncertain.

4. SAME.

In an action to recover rent for machinery transferred under an instrument specifying a certain sum for use of the property, and another sum for which it might be purchased after payment of the rent, the answer set forth an agreement of plaintiff to sell certain machinery at an agreed price, which he warranted to have a certain capacity and to be fit for the purposes for which defendant stated to plaintiff it desired to obtain machinery, and defendant agreed to purchase on that condition, that it did not possess that capacity, and that on ascertaining such fact defendant offered to return it, but plaintiff refused to take it back. Held not to constitute a defense, as it did not apparently relate to the transaction on which the action was brought.

5. PLEADING—COUNTERCLAIM.

In an action to recover rent for machinery transferred under an instrument specifying a certain sum for use of the property, and another sum for which it might be purchased after payment of the rent, defendant set up as a counterclaim an agreement to purchase certain machinery of plaintiff under a warranty, that defendant paid for the machinery, and that it was not as warranted, by reason of which defendant sustained damages to an amount specified. Held, that the counterclaim was not well pleaded, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, it is necessary either that the counterclaim arise out of the same transaction on which suit is brought or upon contract when plaintiff sues on contract, and aside from payment no specific or substantial damages were pleaded.

It is alleged in the complaint that on May 11, 1904, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into and executed a lease in writing of certain personal property (setting forth a copy thereof); that upon the execution of said lease the defendant, by virtue of its provisions, took possession of the property therein described, and has ever since retained the possession thereof, and that no part of the money therein agreed to be paid by it for its use has been paid, and asking judgment therefor.

"Lease.

"Harron, Rickard & McCone, of San Francisco, California, lessor, hereby leases unto Wilson, Lyon & Co., 220 Market street, San Francisco, lessees, the following property for the period of three (3) months from the 10th day of May, A. D. 1904, to wit:

"1—No. 1 American Hoist & Derrick Co. Double Friction Drum Hoist with 15 H. P. Type 'C' Westinghouse Motor direct connected to sketch.

"1—Gipsy for front drum of hoist.

"Said property is to be used only at Franklin, Contra Costa Co., California, and said lessees agree to pay to said lessor at San Francisco, for the use of said property the sum of nine hundred and fifty-six and 28-100 dollars ($956.28) payable as follows:

"Said lessees agree that they will pay the rent at the times and in the manner aforesaid; that they will not permit said property, nor any part thereof, to be affixed to real estate, nor removed from where it is to be used aforesaid, nor to deliver the same to anyone, nor suffer it to be taken away by anyone, except lessor, nor in any manner transfer or attempt to transfer this lease, or any interest therein, or in said property, without the written consent of lessor; that they will keep said property in good condition and repair, and pay all expenses relating to said property, hereafter incurred, including transportation thereof, and all damages to said property suffered by lessor. Said lessees further agree to insure said property in the name of lessor, and that the policy shall be held by lessor.

"It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement, and that upon the failure of the lessee strictly to keep and perform any of the covenants or provisions hereof, by them agreed to be performed, then and thereupon without any notice this instrument shall be deemed to be canceled and of no further effect as against lessor, and all rights and interests of lessee in or to said property shall cease, and all rent by lessee theretofore paid shall belong to lessor as full payment for the prior use of said property, and lessor shall be entitled to take into its possession all said property.

"Said lessor further agrees that upon strict performance by lessee with all the foregoing covenants and provisions by them to be kept and performed, they shall then (but not otherwise) have the right to purchase said property by the prompt payment to lessor of the sum of two and 00-000 ($2.00) dollars.

In its answer to the complaint the defendant made no denial of any of its allegations, but set forth two separate and distinct defenses thereto and also a counterclaim against the plaintiff for the sum of $1,265.72, for which it asked judgment in its favor. The plaintiff demurred to the answer of the defendant on the grounds of ambiguity and uncertainty, and also of its insufficiency to constitute a defense; and also demurred to the counterclaim upon the same grounds. The court sustained these demurrers, and, the defendant declining to amend, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff as prayed for in its complaint. From this judgment the present appeal has been taken.

1. Instruments connected with the transfer of personal property from one person to another, which is in reality a purchase and sale of the property, but where the vendor seeks to retain his ownership until he has been fully paid the purchase price, have been frequently presented to the courts for construction, but the question has generally arisen in actions for determining the right of possession or ownership of the property involved in the transaction; and, when it appears from the terms of the instrument that the intention of the parties was to make a sale of the property, courts will give such construction to the instrument irrespective of the name by which the parties have designated it. This intention, however, in the absence of any evidence of subsequent conduct of the parties in reference to their rights under the instrument, is to be ascertained from the terms of the instrument itself. "The question is always one of intention, and whenever, upon a proper construction of the instrument, it appears that it was the intention of the parties thereto that the sale should be conditioned upon the payment of the price, it is the duty of the court to carry out that intention." Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 552, 42 Pac. 448. "The question is to be determined wholly by the intent of the parties expressed in and deducible from the contract itself. In arriving at the solution of the question, the whole contract is to be considered, and no detached term or condition to be given prominence or effect over and above another." Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474, 56 Pac. 339. The construction to be given to the contract "is found in the ruling intention of the parties gathered from all the language they have used." Herryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, 26 L. Ed. 160.

The case herein presented does not involve any question of ownership or right to the possession of the property described in the instrument, but simply calls for the construction of the instrument for the purpose of determining whether any obligation on the part of the defendant is thereby created in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant admits its execution of the instrument, and that it took and still has the possession of the property described therein, and it does not allege any facts tending to show that the instrument does not correctly set forth the transaction between it and the plaintiff, by virtue of which it received the property. The instrument is entitled "Lease," and by its terms the plaintiff "leased" the property therein described to the defendant for the term of three months, and the defendant agrees to pay to the plaintiff "for the use of the property" the amount of money sued for "at the times and in the manner" designated in the instrument. These are terms peculiarly appropriate to instruments of hiring and lease, and not only do not confer upon the defendant any right in the property except to use it as bailee during the prescribed period, but expressly impose upon it an obligation to pay the plaintiff for such use. The other terms in the instrument restrictive of the manner in which it may use the property are for the benefit of the plaintiff and inconsistent with its ownership by the defendant. The provision giving to the defendant the right, after it should have fully performed the agreements on its part contained in the instrument, to purchase the property by paying to the plaintiff an additional sum of money, placed it under no obligation to make the purchase or to pay the money, and was but an option which it might accept or not as it should choose. And, although the additional sum of money thus to be paid is not large, it is the amount which the parties have agreed upon and made one of the substantive terms of their contract. It is not therefore to be disregarded by the court in determining the construction to be given to the instrument, but this provision furnishes additional ground for holding that the instrument is to be construed as a lease, and as creating a bailment to the defendant without any right of property in the machinery, and an obligation upon it to pay for its use according to the terms of the instrument. As none of the allegations of the complaint are denied, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment as prayed for, unless the facts set forth in the defendant's answer constitute a defense to its cause of action, or establish a liability to the defendant on the part of the plaintiff; and in this connection it is to be observed that the sufficiency of each of the separate defenses as well as of the counterclaim is to be determined without reference to matters elsewhere set forth in the answer, unless connected therewith by direct reference.

2. In the first defense contained in its answer the defendant admits that it entered into and executed the instrument set forth in the complaint, and took possession of the machinery therein described, but it alleges that it executed the instrument and took such possession under a warranty by the plaintiff that the machinery had a certain capacity which it did not in fact have; that its agreement "to take and pay for" said machinery was in consideration of said warranty, and not otherwise; that the said machinery was not fit or proper "for the purposes for which it purchased it," and has always been useless to it; "that upon ascertaining these facts" it immediately offered to return the machinery to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff refused to take it back. The admission that it executed the instrument described in the complaint, without also alleging that the instrument does not correctly represent the nature of the transaction or the terms of the agreement between it and the plaintiff, is unavailing for giving any different construction to the instrument than in accordance with the meaning to be attributed to its language. And although the defendant has alleged that its agreement "to take and pay for" the machinery was in consideration of a warranty by the plaintiff, and that the machinery was not suitable for the purposes "for which it purchased it," these allegations are merely by way of recital, and there is no direct averment that the defendant in any way "agreed to take and pay for" the machinery, or that it ever "purchased" it. An averment by way of recital of a fact which is essential to a cause of action, or an averment from which such fact may be merely inferred, will not supply the absence of a direct averment of the fact. Neither is there any averment that the defendant at any time informed the plaintiff of the purpose for which it desired to obtain or use the machinery.

The allegation that "upon ascertaining these facts" it offered to return the machinery to the plaintiff is defective in failing to state the time at which it ascertained the facts and made the offer; and the demurrer of the plaintiff for uncertainty in this respect was properly sustained by the court. The plaintiff had the right to be informed upon the record whether such offer was before or after the date at which, by the terms of the instrument, the payments for its use matured, or whether it was before or after the defendant had had the use of the machinery during the period for which it was leased. A breach of the warranty would not be a defense to the plaintiff's claim for the rent if the defendant had had the continual use of the machinery until the end of the term for which it hired it, unless it should show that by reason of the breach of such warranty it had sustained some damage, and there is no averment herein of any pecuniary loss.

3. In the second defense contained in its answer the defendant sets forth an agreement upon the part of plaintiff to sell to it at an agreed price certain machinery which the plaintiff warranted to have a certain capacity and to be fit for the purposes for which it stated to the plaintiff that it desired to obtain the machinery; that it agreed to purchase the said machinery upon the condition that it had the capacity warranted by the plaintiff; that the machinery did not possess that capacity, and was not fit for its purposes; "that upon ascertaining these facts" it offered to return the machinery to the plaintiff, but that the latter refused to take it back. The defense here pleaded is the breach of a contract for the sale of certain personal property, while the cause of action set forth in the complaint is the breach of a contract to pay for the use of certain personal property, and, in the absence of any allegation that the two transactions had some connection or some relation to each other, a breach of one of the contracts is not available as a defense to an action for a breach of the other. Upon the face of the pleading it appears that the purchase of the machinery therein alleged was a transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant independent of and in no wise connected with the transaction set forth in the complaint; and, although the property specified has the same description as that described in the complaint, it is not alleged that it is the same property which is alleged in the complaint to have been hired by the defendant, and which, by its failure to deny this allegation, it admits that it did hire, and there is no presumption that it is the same. Proof of all the facts herein alleged would not establish a defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint unless the defendant should also show the identity of the two transactions; and without the averment of such identity the pleading does not set forth a defense.

4. In its counterclaim the defendant makes the same allegations as in its second defense, except that it does not allege that it offered to return or has returned the machinery to the plaintiff; and in addition to the matters set forth in said defense it alleges that it "did purchase the machines and pay therefor the sum of $958.28," and that "it has sustained damages by reason of the premises to the amount of $1,265.72," for which it asks judgment against the plaintiff. A counterclaim must be (1) a cause of action in favor of the defendant arising out of the transaction set forth as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action; or (2) if the plaintiff's right arises upon contract the counterclaim must also be a cause of action arising upon contract. Code Civ. Proc. § 438. There is no allegation in the counterclaim herein that the property which the defendant claims to have purchased from the plaintiff is the same as that covered by the lease set forth in the complaint, or that the purchase was in any way connected with the subject of the action, or with the transaction upon which the plaintiff's cause of action is based, and it is therefore unavailable as a counterclaim within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 438. A counterclaim under subdivision 2 of the section must set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and is subject to the same grounds of demurrer as would be an original complaint. In an action for the recovery of damages, the claimant must allege facts in his complaint which will show that he is entitled thereto.

For the breach of an obligation arising upon contract the party aggrieved is in general entitled to only compensation for the loss or injury proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom. Civ. Code, § 3300. "The general damages which are implied from a breach of contract, and which need not be pleaded, must not be confused with special damages, which will not be presumed from the mere breach, but which may have accrued by reason of injuries following from it. Such special damages, if they have accrued, must be pleaded in order that the defendant may have notice of and be prepared to contest them." Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529. Mr. Chitty says: "When the law does not necessarily imply that the plaintiff sustained the damages by the act complained of, it is essential to the validity of the declaration that the resulting damage should be shown with particularity. And whenever the damages sustained have not necessarily accrued from the act complained of, and consequently are not implied by law, then in order to prevent surprise on the defendant, which might otherwise ensue at the trial, the plaintiff must in general state the particular damage which he has sustained, or he will not be permitted to give evidence of it"—quoted in Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 102, 87 Am. Dec. 107.

Aside from the payment to the plaintiff of the purchase price of the machinery, the counterclaim herein does not set forth any fact from which the law would imply that the defendant has sustained any pecuniary damage; and there is no presumption that the machinery is of less value than was paid for it. Neither does it follow, because the machinery is useless to the defendant or not suitable for its purposes, that such value has been diminished; and the defendant cannot therefore, without returning or offering to return it, hold the plaintiff liable to refund the amount which it paid for it.

The measure of damages which is prescribed by section 3314, Civil Code, for a breach of a warranty of the fitness of an article of personal property for a particular purpose, is not to be confounded with the mode of pleading in an action to recover the damages for such breach. In such action the claimant must set forth in his complaint the facts which the section prescribes as the basis for measuring the damages. The "excess of value" which the property would have had, and the "loss incurred" in an effort to use the property which was received, are facts which must be alleged, or the complaint will fail to show that the claimant is entitled to the recovery of such damages. The counterclaim herein does not allege that there was any difference in value between the machinery which the defendant received and machinery of the capacity and quality which the plaintiff warranted it to have; and the allegations that it does not have the capacity warranted by the plaintiff, or that it is "useless to the defendant," or not suited "for the purposes of the defendant," taken in connection with the admission that the defendant still retains its possession, fall far short of showing that the defendant has sustained any pecuniary damage. Neither is there any allegation that the defendant has incurred any expense or sustained any loss or damage by reason of an attempt to use the machinery, or that it has ever used the machinery, or even made any attempt to use it; and it is perfectly consistent with the allegations therein that it has made no effort to use it, and that its defects were disclosed upon a mere inspection of its condition as soon as it was received.

By reason of the allegations of a breach of the plaintiff's contract of warranty the counterclaim sets forth a cause of action for nominal damages, and is good as against a general demurrer; but, as there is no presumption that such breach would ordinarily or in any likelihood result in the amount of damages which the defendant seeks to recover, such damages are special, and the plaintiff was entitled to be informed of the facts out of which they arose, so that it may be prepared, if it so desires, to controvert their existence. The averment that the defendant "has sustained damages by reason of the premises to the amount of $1,265" is its conclusion from facts which were within its knowledge, but which it has not set forth so that it may be seen whether his conclusion is properly drawn, or so that the plaintiff may have an opportunity to controvert them; nor is any fact stated from which the court can determine that such special damage was the result of the breach of the warranty.

In Acheson v. Western U. Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 641, 31 Pac. 583, the complaint, after setting forth facts constituting the plaintiff's right of action, alleged that by reason thereof he was damaged in the sum of $684; and upon the default of the defendant judgment for that amount was rendered against it. Upon an appeal therefrom the Supreme Court reversed the judgment, saying: "The gist of the action is for the recovery of special damages, and there is no allegation of special damage. Nominal damages only were recoverable upon the complaint. No damage, unless nominal, necessarily resulted from the alleged breach of contract." For the breach of a covenant against incumbrances, when it is not alleged that the plaintiff has paid the alleged incumbrance, only nominal damages can be recovered. De Forest v. Leete, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 122. In Manufacturers' Co. v. Gray, 111 N. C. 93, 15 S. E. 940, which was an action to recover the purchase price of certain real estate, and the defense was the breach of a warranty of the title, and a counterclaim for expense incurred for improvements upon the property, it was held that the latter could not be maintained for the reason that such expenses had not been specially pleaded. See, also, 1 Sutherland on Damages, 754; Frohreich v. Gammon, 28 Minn. 476, 11 N. W. 88; Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343; Richardson v. Jones, 1 Nev. 408; Warner v. Bacon, 8 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 253; Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 103, 87 Am. Dec. 107; Nunan v. San Francisco, 38 Cal. 689; Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529; Hancock v. Hubbell, 71 Cal. 537, 12 Pac. 618.

A pleading is defective whenever evidence cannot be received in its support, and, as there is no allegation in the counterclaim herein of facts under which any evidence of substantial damage would be admissible, the special demurrer of the plaintiff thereto for not setting forth in what manner, or by what facts, the defendant had been damaged in the amount claimed was properly sustained by the court. As was said in Philip v. Durkee, 108 Cal. 300, 41 Pac. 407: "Considered as an action for damages for a breach of the contract, it does state a cause of action, but as such it is obnoxious to the objections raised by the special demurrer. It is uncertain as to what the damage consisted of, or as to the extent of the damage."

1. MINES AND MINERALS — LEASES — FORFEITURE.

Where a mining lease mentioned no specific term but the lessee covenanted to pay a royalty semi-annually, and that the payments should begin on or before six months from the date of the lease, the lessee's delay of 1½ years to operate under the lease, and failure to pay any of the installments during that time, entitled the lessor to a cancellation.

2. ABATEMENT—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING—DISMISSAL OF OTHER ACTION.

Where plaintiff filed with the court a written direction to the clerk to dismiss the action, the fact that the clerk failed to perform his duty to enter a dismissal in his judgment book did not render another action by plaintiff for the same cause obnoxious to a plea of another action pending.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by D. McIntosh against H. W. Robb. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Willard, for appellant. Luce, Sloane & Luce, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. This is an action for the rescission, cancellation, and setting aside of a mining lease. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals therefrom, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

No specific term is mentioned in the contract, a cancellation of which is sought herein, but said contract is entitled a "mining lease," and it is stated that the same is made "for the purpose—mining minerals or gems, and in consideration of the said demise the said lessee does covenant and agree with the said lessor, his heirs or assigns, to pay and deliver a royalty in amount and conditioned as follows: 10 per cent. of the net proceeds of any, and all, mining operations upon said property from date of this lease and until such a time as the sum of all the separate payments of royalty shall equal fifteen hundred dollars, at which time royalty shall be fully paid up and free to said lessee for a period of fifteen years from date of this lease, provided that payments shall not exceed six in number and shall be semi-annual and shall begin on or before six months from date of this lease," etc. The evidence showed, and it is found by the court, that, by virtue of said contract, the defendant entered upon and took possession of the premises for the period of one month after the date of the lease, the 3d day of December, 1903, and did during that month mine, work, and prospect on said lands to the extent of making a cut in the hillside thereon, about 8 feet in width and 10 or 12 feet in length and 7 or 8 feet deep at the deepest part; that he performed no other work of mining or development upon said property of any amount or value; that thereafter said defendant entirely failed and refused to further enter upon and carry on the work of mining for minerals or gems on said premises, or to do any work of mining or development thereon; that said defendant has at all times failed and refused to pay to plaintiff any royalty or rental for said premises or to perform any of the conditions or to pay any of the considerations provided for in said contract or otherwise. It is further found that on the 6th day of September, 1905, said plaintiff gave notice to said defendant of his rescission of said contract and agreement, and terminated the same by serving upon and delivering to said defendant a written notice of said rescission, as set forth in the complaint, terminating said agreement or lease and requiring said defendant to quit and deliver up to plaintiff said premises.

It appears that for about a year and a half following the first month after the execution of this contract there was an entire failure on the part of the defendant to do anything under the contract, and during all that time he failed to comply with the agreement to pay royalty in direct violation of that portion of the agreement which provides that payments shall not exceed six in number, shall be semi-annual, and shall begin on or before six months from the date of the lease. In contracts of this character there is an implied covenant for diligent search and operation, and, under such a contract, the lessee is bound to proceed with his mining operations with reasonable diligence. As is said in Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 31, of a similar lease: "It would be unjust and unreasonable, and contravene the nature and spirit of the lease, to allow the lessee to continue to hold his term a considerable length of time without making any effort at all to mine for gold or other metals. Such a construction of the rights of the parties would enable him to prevent the lessor from getting his tolls under the express covenant to pay the same and deprive him of all opportunity to work the mine himself or permit others to do so. The law does not tolerate such practical absurdity, nor will it permit the possibility of such injustice." See Maxwell v. Todd (N. C.) 16 S. E. 926. As further showing that the lessee was under an implied obligation through the terms of his contract to proceed with his mining operations with reasonable diligence, we cite the case of Ray v. Gas Co. (Pa.) 20 Atl. 1065, 12 L. R. A. 290, 21 Am. St. Rep. 922, and quote therefrom: "The clear purpose of the lessor was to have his land operated for oil or gas, and the condition was inserted for his benefit. While the obligation on part of the lessee to operate is not expressed in so many words, it arises by necessary implication. * * * If a farm is leased for farming purposes, the lessee to deliver to the lessor a share of the crops, in the nature of rent, it would be absurd to say, because there was no express agreement to farm, that the lessee was under no obligation to cultivate the land."

We are of opinion that the delay of a year and a half to operate under the lease, and the failure to pay any of the six-months installments during that time, as provided in the contract, was such a decided failure on the part of the lessee to comply with his contract as warranted the plaintiff in rescinding the same, giving notice of the termination thereof and having the same canceled, and we see no error in the court in granting the plaintiff such relief on the case presented to it. We deem this failure to pay as agreed, and failure to mine for minerals for this long period, as a failure of the consideration upon the faith of which the contract was entered into on the part of the plaintiff, and fully warranted the plaintiff in bringing the contract to an end.

The answer of defendant also sets up as a defense a plea of another action pending, involving the same matters contained in this action. The record of that action was placed in evidence, wherein it appears that on the 3d day of November a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint in that action was sustained and 10 days allowed to file an amended complaint, and that thereafter, on November 13, 1905, plaintiff's time for filing amended complaint was extended by the order of the court 10 days, to November 23, 1905. On November 22, 1905, before the plaintiff's time to amend his complaint had expired, the plaintiff filed with the court a written order and direction, addressed to the clerk of said court, and directed said clerk as follows: "You will enter the dismissal of the above-entitled action." This was signed by the attorneys for the plaintiff in that case. This formal order and direction to the clerk on the part of the plaintiff, we understand, operated as a dismissal of that action and left the plaintiff to commence a new action at his option. An action so dismissed cannot be pleaded as an action pending, nor does it in any manner interfere with or operate as a defense in a new action. The failure of the clerk to perform his ministerial duties by entering the dismissal and causing a proper judgment of dismissal to be entered in his judgment book should not and cannot be allowed to affect the substantial rights of the parties. "In other words, if plaintiff at that time had the right to dismiss his action and had taken all the proper steps to that end, that right could not be impaired or lost by the refusal of the clerk to perform a plain duty." Kaufman v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 152, 46 Pac. 904.

BAILEY v. BROWN. (Civ. 247.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—THEORY IN SUSTAINING NONSUIT.

Though a trial judge places his judgment of nonsuit upon insufficient grounds, it will be sustained if it can be supported on any other ground, whether raised by motion or not.

2. BREACH OF MARRIAGE PROMISE—PLEADINGS—VARIANCE.

In an action for breach of a marriage promise, there was a fatal variance between plaintiff's allegation that defendant promised to marry her upon her request at any time and proof that the marriage was not to occur until her mother's death, and therefore a nonsuit was properly allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Breach of Marriage Promise, § 25.]

3. PLEADINGS—VARIANCE—EVIDENCE ADMITTED WITHOUT OBJECTION.

Unless plaintiff obtains leave to so amend his complaint as to conform to the proof, an objection on the ground of variance may properly be raised by motion for a nonsuit, though defendant had not objected to the admission of the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

A. J. Thatcher and Weldon & Held, for appellant. McNab & Hirsch and Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action to recover damages for the alleged breach of defendant's agreement to marry her. Upon the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The appeal is from the judgment on bill of exceptions.

The grounds of the motion for nonsuit were: (1) That the contract testified to is at fatal variance with that alleged in the complaint; (2) that the contract is void as against public policy; and (3) that there is no breach of the contract shown. The court granted the motion on the ground that the contract testified to was "against public policy and in restraint of marriage." No other ground was mentioned in the order made by the court. It is well settled, however, that a nonsuit must be sustained if it might have been properly granted upon any ground. The trial judge may or may not place his judgment upon sufficient grounds. His action will be upheld if it can be justified on any ground, whether made a ground of the motion or not. Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 412, 25 Pac. 487; Davey v. So. Pac. Co., 116 Cal. 325, 48 Pac. 117. The complaint avers that "on request the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff, and that the said promise has been from time to time renewed." It appeared from plaintiff's testimony in chief that the question of marriage between her and defendant was first "talked about" by them in 1896, but it is not shown to have taken any definite form until January 5, 1899. Plaintiff testified: "At that time we were talking about some one being engaged to be married, and he said to me, 'let you and me get engaged to be married,' and I said, 'All right, I am willing.'" On cross-examination she stated the matter more definitely. She testified: "The time agreed upon that we were to be married was after my mother's death. That arrangement was not made at the time of our engagement on January 5, 1899; it was subsequent. My mother is still living. * * * After our engagement it was understood that we should not be married until after my mother's death, and that has always been the understanding since that time. * * * I made no immediate plans or preparations for our marriage, which was owing to the fact that we had agreed not to be married until after my mother's death. * * * I said we were to be married when my mother should die." It was admitted by the pleadings that defendant had married another woman shortly before the action was commenced.

It seems clear enough from the complaint that the contract was that defendant agreed to marry plaintiff upon her request at any time. But the contract as testified to was that he agreed to marry her after and not before the death of her mother, who is still living. According to the complaint the marriage was to take place at plaintiff's option and without further condition. Under the contract proven, the marriage was not to take place until the happening of an important event over which neither party had any control, and which might not happen for many years. Indeed, it might not happen at all for plaintiff's mother might outlive one or both the parties to the action. There is an essential difference here between allegation and proof in which case the rule is that defendant is entitled to a nonsuit on the ground of variance. Owen v. Meade, 104 Cal. 179, 37 Pac. 923, and cases there cited. The rule is sometimes thus stated: That the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action alleged, and not upon some other which may appear from the proofs. Shenandoah M. Co. v. Morgan, 106 Cal. 409, 417, 39 Pac. 802; Davis v. Pac. Tel. Co., 127 Cal. 312, 321, 59 Pac. 698. Unless plaintiff obtained leave to so amend his complaint as to conform to the proofs, the defendant may have his nonsuit, though the testimony was admitted without objection. Tomlinson v. Monroe, 41 Cal. 94; Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 46 Pac. 458.

There was not only a variance between the proof and the allegation, but a failure to prove the cause of action alleged. It may be said that the point is not now available to defendant for the reason that he has by his marriage made it impossible for him to perform the contract as proven. We think, however, that it was till incumbent upon plaintiff to make her complaint conform to the proofs by amendment, upon leave of the court or suffer the consequences by nonsuit. In any view of the case and whatever the effect of defendant's marriage the allegata and probata must correspond. Owen v. Meade, supra.

We express no opinion upon the question as to whether the contract was in restraint of marriage and against public policy. The question is, so far as we have discovered, res integra in this state and, as the judgment may rest upon the point just disposed of, we prefer to leave it open.

Several errors are assigned in the exclusion or admission of evidence, and error also as to permitting defendant to amend his answer. There was no evidence excluded which reflected any light upon the contract or which affected the question of variance above discussed. The rulings, even if erroneous, were harmless in view of that question. The amendment of defendant's answer was within the discretion of the court.

BUCKLES, J. I concur in the judgment sustaining the nonsuit.

McLAUGHLIN, J. (concurring). I concur in the order affirming the judgment. In my opinion the evidence clearly demonstrates that the plaintiff could not recover even if a complaint was filed containing the most elaborate averments in consonance with the proof. According to plaintiff's testimony the defendant only agreed to marry her upon the death of her mother, who is still in the land of the living. This event might not occur during the lifetime of either of the contracting parties. The contingency upon which the fulfillment of the promise rests is so far beyond the control of the parties, and is so uncertain, that no valid contract could exist. How can it be said that either of these parties are bound by a promise which neither might ever be called upon to fulfill? How could a contract to marry exist when the promisor might never be under a present obligation to marry the promisee, or vice versa? If this good mother should live to a very ripe old age, as mothers sometimes do, no human could tell what might happen. Either of the parties might be waiting for the other, harp in hand, beyond this vale of tears, or both might pine away and die before this promise of future connubial bliss could ripen into a cause of action enforceable in earthly courts. Then, too, age creeps on all apace, and, if the contingency which could make this promise quick with life, as a legal obligation, performable presently, was delayed through many weary years, waning desire and ripened judgment might prompt the parties to acknowledge the wisdom of that rule of public policy which forbids long-continued restraint upon marriage, and frowns upon a contract tantamount to an indefinite postponement thereof. And, if the roseate dreams of youth survived the blasting frosts of age, decrepitude, mental or physical incapacity, infirmities due to weight of years might be urged as defenses not now available to this defendant.

Counsel for appellant, whose ability cannot be questioned, and whose industry has always afforded welcome aid to this court in the consideration of questions by them presented, have cited cases from other jurisdictions supporting a doctrine at utter variance with the views above expressed. But I am unwilling that a rule so repugnant to my reason and so fraught with uncertainty and temptation, should find implied sanction in a decision here rendered. In one of these cases it was said that such a contract was not a restraint upon marriage because the restraint was terminable at the will of the parties. This reasoning does not commend itself to my judgment. To say that restraint might be ended by mutual consent of the parties is to admit the existence of such restraint while such consent is withheld. To say that parties may obviate an objection based on rules of public policy is to admit that some new promise or agreement is necessary to legalize a compact between them. In the case at bar could either of the parties compel the other to give that consent essential to terminate the restraint imposed by their original agreement? Could either of them demand the fulfillment of the mutual promise before the stated contingency happened? These questions must be answered in the negative. Any contract, not wholly denounced by rules of law, may be made enforceable and legal by consent of the parties, no matter how absolutely impotent it might be as originally drawn or made. Parties to a verbal agreement falling within the statute of frauds might consent to reduce their agreement to writing. Parties to a lease of premises for an immoral purpose might consent to remove the taint of immorality, or parties to a fraudulent agreement might consent to waive or remove the taint of fraud. But the legality or enforceability of a contract does not depend upon what the parties thereto might have done or may still do, but upon what they did do at the time the agreement was made. The fact that an invalid contract may be made valid by consent of the parties does not prevent either of the parties from withholding such consent, nor does it prevent either of them from urging such invalidity when the other sues to recover damages for the breach of a contract which is nudum pactum. God alone can tell whether a promise to marry upon the death of a third party will become potent as a personal contractual duty during the lifetime of either of the parties to it. He alone can say whether such a promise will restrain or postpone marriage for one or many years. If a promise to marry was expressly made performable only after the lapse of 10 or 20 years, few courts would be found willing to lend legal sanction to an agreement so at variance with public policy. And what finite being can say that a promise of the character here under consideration would become performable even within 20 years? Human laws deal only with finite knowledge and finite things. They do not attempt to probe the secrets of the infinite, nor make the solution of infinite problems a test of human contractual rights. Hence a promise to assume marital relations with another cannot be made contingent upon the infinite will concerning the span of a third life, without creating uncertainty which the finite mind can neither unravel nor dispel.

Waiving these considerations, however, and assuming that the compact here proven amounted to a contract untainted by uncertainty and uncondemned by public policy, I am still unable to see how a cause of action could be stated. True, the promisor still lives and is married to another, but, according to this record, plaintiff is still blessed with the care, love, and companionship of her mother. The wife of defendant's present choice may precede that mother to the bourne "whence no traveler returns," or divorce, though suspended for one year by our beneficent laws, may sever the existing nuptial tie, and render respondent free to embark on the matrimonial sea for another voyage before the plaintiff can call upon him to take his place by her side. He may, when the oft-mentioned contingency happens, be willing and even anxious to claim the plaintiff as his bride, and, if so, how could she complain? He did not agree to abstain from matrimony until her mother obligingly stepped from the stage of human action, nor did he promise to refrain from loving and cherishing another during the interval which might elapse before his promise could become a present obligation, for the breach of which he could be mulcted in damages. He might feel the need of wifely counsel and comfort during the years and years which might pass away before the plaintiff would be bereft of her parent. True, inconveniences, many and annoying, might result from a marriage ad interim. Adult sons and daughters, fruits of his union with another, might tearfully protest against the fulfillment of his ancient trothplight, but if he should be free of hand, faithful of heart, and ready to abide the promise of his verile youth when plaintiff's mother dies, the plaintiff must needs be content. She can only call upon him to perform his promise when the time arrives, and meantime she must forego compensation in ducats for the breach of a promise he has not yet broken. Her mother still lives, and she must wait until a daughter's filial love and care no longer avails to stay the hand of the destroyer. If, in the fullness of time, this should happen, during the lifetime of both plaintiff and defendant, she might at least be able to prove a breach of this promise, which, in my opinion, was void ab initio, and is void in toto.

HERSBERGER v. PACIFIC LUMBER CO.

(Civ. 253.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 23, 1906. Rehearing Denied Dec. 22, 1906.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

While plaintiff was working around a chute used for the conveyance of waste, he was injured by a piece of edging being forced through a hole in the chute. In an action for the injuries the court instructed that, while the servant assumes all the ordinary risks, he does not assume the risk from defective premises or machinery if the defect was either known to the master or could have been discovered by a reasonable inspection, unless the servant also knew the dangers, and a servant will be held to have known of such defect only when he had actual knowledge thereof, or when the defect was obvious, or when he was put upon inquiry which it was gross negligence for him to neglect, and the burden of showing such knowledge rests on defendant, and also instructed that the servant is not required to use any degree of care to discover defects; it is not his duty to inquire into the safety of the machinery or place of work, but he has a right to rely upon the master to furnish him a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe machinery, and may assume that the master has done his duty in that respect. Held that, considering the instructions together and applying them to the facts, they amounted to a correct statement of the law.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction that the preponderance of evidence in a case is not alone determined by the number of witnesses testifying to a particular fact, and that, in determining upon which side the preponderance of evidence is, the jury may consider the opportunities of the several witnesses as to the matters about which they testify, their conduct while testifying, their interest in the result, the probability of the truth of their several statements, and that from all such circumstances the jury may determine upon which side is the weight of the evidence, was not erroneous, as it was not argumentative, and the court was not limited to the circumstances enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1847, 2061, in relation to the effect of evidence and to presumptions concerning testimony.

3. DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Civ. Code, § 3333, provides that, in an action for personal injuries, plaintiff shall be entitled to receive the amount which will compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused thereby. In an action for injuries the court instructed that plaintiff was entitled to recover for all damages which he had suffered up to the time of trial, and for all damages that it was reasonably probable he would sustain in the future; that in estimating the damages all the consequences of the injury, future as well as past, should be considered, and that, if the injuries were permanent, such fact must also be considered, and that, if the jury found for plaintiff, such sum should be awarded as in "your best judgment will fairly and fully compensate him for any injuries received by reason of the negligence of the defendant." Held, that the instruction as a whole was not erroneous on the ground that the quoted clause was equivalent to a suggestion that the jury might award damages according to any feeling they might have, or on the ground that it suggested anything than that they must exercise their judgment from all the evidence.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a sawmill a chute was used for the conveyance of waste and edgings, and it was plaintiff's duty, by means of an iron bar, to stir up the edgings in the chute so that they would slide down, and while engaged in his duties plaintiff was injured by a piece of edging being forced through a hole in the chute. Held, that a requested instruction that, if plaintiff was looking into the chute "at the place where he placed the bar * * * and was thereby injured by reason of any edgings coming out of the hole," the verdict must be for defendant, was properly refused as not announcing any principle of law, as stating a fact, and ignoring any negligence on the part of defendant in not providing a safe place to work, and making plaintiff liable if he looked at his work while doing it.

5. SAME.

A requested instruction that, if plaintiff was using the bar in a "careless and negligent manner, being on the wrong side thereof," and while so using the same received the injury, the verdict must be for defendant, was properly refused, as it would make no difference how negligently plaintiff might have been using the bar if the negligence did not contribute to his injury, and as to whether he was on the wrong side of the bar being a question for the jury when inquiring into the cause of the injury.

6. SAME.

In an action for injuries to a servant an instruction that, if the injuries to plaintiff were caused proximately or exclusively by his own negligence or the negligence of any fellow employés, defendant was not liable, was as favorable to defendant on the question of contributory negligence as he was entitled to.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Nathaniel Hersberger against the Pacific Lumber Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gillett & Cutler, for appellant. Mahan & Mahan and Coonan & Kehoe, for respondent.

BUCKLES, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The case was tried by a jury, which found for the plaintiff in the sum of $7,000, and judgment was entered for plaintiff for that sum.

The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The plaintiff was in the employ of defendant in its lumber mill in Humboldt county, and was hurt in the eye by a piece of timber in the course of his employment. The complaint alleges that at the time of said injury defendant maintained and operated in connection with his lumber mill a certain machine known as a "hog," which was used for grinding and cutting up edgings and waste pieces of lumber into small pieces to be conveyed to the furnaces in said mill to be burned. That such waste pieces of lumber were conveyed to said "hog" from the main floor of said mill by means of a chute about eight feet wide at the lower end and had sloping sides so that said waste pieces of lumber would slide down said chute and into said "hog." Said chute was inclined at an angle of 45 degrees. It is further alleged that the sides, bottom, and end of said chute were constructed of planks about two inches thick, and that said chute was partially covered on the inside with sheet iron or boiler iron so as to prevent the edgings and other pieces of waste lumber from coming into contact with the planking of said chute, thereby preventing said planking from becoming worn and damaged, and also to prevent said waste pieces from protruding through sides or end of said chute; that on December 17, 1902, the day of the accident, and for a long time prior thereto defendant maintained said chute in an unsafe, defective, and dangerous condition in this: That the planks on the end or face thereof were so negligently and carelessly fastened that one of said planks became and was loose and dropped down at one end, thereby leaving a crack or hole in the end or face of said chute about three inches wide, through which edgings and other pieces of waste lumber could pass, thereby rendering said chute defective, dangerous, and unsafe; that on said day and for 10 days prior thereto, plaintiff was and had been employed by defendant to attend said "hog," and that on said day plaintiff was engaged in attending said "hog" in pursuance of said employment; that, in order to perform his duties, it was necessary for him to stand near said "hog" and directly in front of the end or face of said chute and very close to the end thereof, and with the aid of an iron bar stir up the edgings and other pieces of lumber that might be thrown into said chute so that they would slide down said chute and into said "hog," and in order to perform said work it was necessary for plaintiff to stand very close to the end of said chute; that on said day while plaintiff was in the performance of his duties a piece of edging about six feet long was violently forced through said hole or crack in the end or face of said chute and struck plaintiff in the left eye, and so impaired it that it had to be and was removed.

The appeal is here on a bill of exceptions containing the evidence, but, as it is admitted that there is a conflict in the evidence on all the material issues raised by the pleadings, and no errors in the admission of evidence being pointed out, we will not consider the evidence at all. The answer denies specifically all the allegations of the complaint, and alleges that the injury suffered by plaintiff was caused by one of the ordinary risks of the employment in which he was engaged, and which he assumed and of which he had full knowledge, and that the injury suffered by plaintiff was proximately and directly caused by reason of his own carelessness and negligence. Error is assigned by appellant in giving so much of instruction 8 as we place in italics. The whole instruction reads as follows: "The defendant also alleges that the injury suffered by plaintiff was caused by one of the ordinary risks of the employment in which plaintiff was engaged and which he assumed, and of which he had full knowledge, but I charge you that, while the servant assumes all the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, yet he does not assume the risk from defective premises, machinery, or structures furnished him by the master, if the defect was either known to the master, or could have been discovered by him by a reasonably careful inspection to discover defects, unless the servant also knew the dangers and risks arising therefrom; and I charge you that a servant will be held to have known of such defect only when he had actual knowledge thereof, or when the defect was so obvious that he must have known or simply refused to open his eyes and see, or when he was put upon inquiry by some discovery or suggestion of danger which it was gross negligence for him to neglect. And I charge you that the burden of showing such knowledge on the part of the plaintiff rests on defendant." This instruction was given and upheld in Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 187, 60 Pac. 687, but appellant insists the doctrine thus laid down was overruled in Thompson v. Cal. Const. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 82 Pac. 368. In that case a like instruction was given, and, upon a motion for a new trial being made, the lower court granted the motion upon the sole ground that it had made an error in giving the following instruction: "It is the duty of the employer to furnish an employé with a reasonably safe place in which to do any work the employer shall require of the employé, and to keep that place reasonably safe, and the employé has the right to assume that the employer has performed that duty, and the employé is not required to use any degree of care or diligence to discover danger to which he shall be exposed by reason of the failure of his employer to do his duty, and the employé shall be held to have assumed the risk only when he knew, and will be held to have known only when the danger was so obvious that he must have known or simply neglected to open his eyes and see, or when he was put upon inquiry by some discovery or suggestion of danger which it was gross carelessness for him to neglect."

I do not think instruction 8 in the case at bar is subject to the criticism made in Thompson v. Cal. Const. Co., supra. The following instruction 9 might be. The objection is taken to the italicized part and it reads as follows: "I instruct you that the servant is not required to use any degree of care or diligence to discover defects. It is not his duty to inquire into the safety of the machinery or structures or place of work furnished him by the master with or upon which to do work. The servant has a right to rely upon the master to furnish him a reasonably safe place to work, and reasonably safe machinery and structures to work with, because it is the master's duty to do so, and the servant may justly assume that the master has done his duty and furnished him such reasonably safe place, machinery and structure." This instruction or that part objected to would be error standing alone. But with the words of instruction 9 ringing in their ears how could it be possible, under these words, the "servant is not required to use any degree of care or diligence to discover defects," to understand that, if the danger was one that he could not help seeing and the plaintiff did see and yet kept on at work with such danger staring him in the face, and under such circumstances he would not assume the risk himself? Besides, the court in Thompson v. Cal. Const. Co., supra, says: "We express no opinion upon the question whether or not this part of the instruction was correct as applies to this particular case." The court then cites sections 1970 and 1971, Civ. Code, which it says is declarative of the law upon this subject, and these sections read as follows:

"Sec. 1970. An employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employee or unless the employer has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee.

"Sec. 1971. An employer must in all cases indemnify his employee for losses caused by the former's want of ordinary care."

Applying the instruction to this case there was a hole three inches wide in the end or face of said chute through which edgings and other pieces of lumber could pass, rendering the chute dangerous and unsafe for any person to work around, and it was while the chute was in this condition and plaintiff working around and about it and in front of the end or face very close to the end of the chute, that a piece of edging or lumber about six feet long was forced through said hole and struck him in the eye. It would seem to us that, under instructions 8 and 9, reading them together, as the court must have done, the jury must have understood that, if the plaintiff could have observed this three-inch hole while standing where and as close to it as he was required to to perform his labor and without hunting around to find it, and kept on at work, he would be contributing to the negligence and likewise to the injury, and thus, under said instructions, would not be entitled to recover, and the burden of proving this knowledge on the part of the plaintiff was upon the defendant. Thus considering the two instructions, we do not think that there was any reversible error in them.

The following instruction is assigned as error: "The preponderance of evidence in a case is not alone determined by the number of witnesses testifying to a particular fact or state of facts. In determining upon which side the preponderance of evidence is, the jury should take into consideration the opportunities of the several witnesses for seeing or knowing the things about which they testify, their conduct and demeanor while testifying, their interest or lack of interest, if any, in the result of the suit, the probability or improbability of the truth of their several statements, in view of all the other evidence, facts, and circumstances proved in the trial, and from all these circumstances determine upon which side is the weight or preponderance of the evidence." It is claimed that this instruction is argumentative. It does not appear so to us. The court has simply told the jury the common-sense circumstances known to every intelligent juror, by which the statements made by witnesses may be weighed. The court is not limited to the circumstances enumerated in sections 1847 and 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure. People v. Miles, 143 Cal. 640, 77 Pac. 666. This instruction is general and not applied to any particular witness, and is, therefore, not subject to the criticism made in People v. Hertz, 105 Cal. 663, 39 Pac. 32; People v. Shattuck, 109 Cal. 681, 42 Pac. 315; and People v. Van Ewan, 111 Cal. 149, 43 Pac. 520. In the case of People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 62 Pac. 297, a criminal case, the lower court, after having instructed the jury as to admissibility of circumstantial evidence or presumptive evidence, further instructed them as follows: "When direct evidence cannot be produced, minds will form their judgments on circumstances, and act on the probabilities of the case." The Supreme Court held this language to be clearly erroneous. The instruction "in its explicit statement it purported merely to state a very common, though not always commendable, tendency of the human mind to act on probabilities and without satisfactory evidence; but it implied that the jury were at liberty to pursue this course. But the law requires the jury to be satisfied or convinced of the guilt of the accused before convicting, and hence permits them to act only on evidence sufficient to produce belief or conviction, or, as expressed in the Code, on 'that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind.'" But this is not a criminal case where the liability of the defendant must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. We think the reasoning of the Supreme Court in People v. O'Brien has no application to a civil action. In a civil case "the weight of the evidence or preponderance of the probabilities is sufficient to establish a fact." Murphy v. Waterhouse, 113 Cal. 467, 45 Pac. 866, 54 Am. St. Rep. 365.

The portions of instruction numbered 12 which we italicize are assigned as error by appellant. The instruction is as follows: "In this action the plaintiff, if he has shown himself entitled to recover, is entitled to recover for all damages which he has suffered up to the time of the trial, and for all damages that it is reasonably probable that he will sustain in the future, not exceeding the sum claimed in the complaint. In estimating the compensatory damages in cases of this character, all the consequences of the injury, future as well as past, are to be taken into consideration, including the bodily and physical pain and suffering which is shown by the proof to be reasonably certain to have naturally resulted from the injury. The plaintiff, if you find him entitled to recover, should be awarded compensation for all expenses actually paid or incurred for doctor's bills, not exceeding the amount claimed therefor in the complaint. If you find that plaintiff is entitled to recover, and believe from the evidence that the injuries sustained are permanent in their character, this must also be taken into consideration in your estimate of damages, and, if you find for the plaintiff in this action, such sum should be awarded as in your best judgment will fairly and fully compensate him for any injuries received by reason of the alleged negligence and carelessness of the defendant not exceeding in amount the sum claimed in the complaint." The mere reading of the whole instruction is sufficient to show that there is no error in it. It seems to us well established that "in actions for negligence, the law does not attempt to fix any precise rules for ascertaining what is a just compensation, but, from the necessity of the case, leaves the assessment of the damages to the good sense and judgment of the jury, whose province it is to make the assessment." Lee v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 Pac. 572; Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 523, 42 Pac. 983. It is true the Code (section 3333, Civ. Code) provides the rule of law governing damages in cases of this kind to be "the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not." When the jury was told they might award plaintiff such sum as in their "best judgment will fairly and fully compensate him for any injuries received by reason of the alleged negligence and carelessness of the defendant, not exceeding in amount the sum claimed in the complaint" there was no suggestion that they might award damages according to any feeling they might have, nor did the court suggest to the jury anything else than that they must exercise their judgment from all the evidence in the case as to what the proper amount of damages should be. Therefore, Fries v. American Lead Pencil Company, 141 Cal. 610, 75 Pac. 164, relied upon by appellant, is not a case in point here. The instruction read as a whole is not objectionable and fairly states the law.

The court refused to give the following instructions asked by defendant: "No. 22. I further instruct you that, if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff was looking into the chute at the place where he placed the bar to fill it, when clogged, and was thereby injured by reason of any edging or other substance coming out of that hole, then your verdict must be for the defendant." This was not given "because given in substance in defendant's instruction No. 13. The thirteenth instruction is as follows: "I charge you that, if you find from the evidence that plaintiff sustained his injuries from any other cause than that alleged in his complaint, you must find a verdict for defendant." This the court gave and is as fair to the defendant as it could ask. The instruction asked and not given was properly refused because not announcing any principle of law. In addition to this and that the court thought it was given in substance in instruction No. 13 there is the further objection to it that it states a fact, to wit, that "where he placed the bar to fill it when clogged," which should be left to the jury. Further, it totally ignores any negligence on the part of defendant in not providing a safe place for his servant to work, and makes plaintiff liable if he looks at his work while performing it and while so looking is hurt. The instruction was properly refused.

Refusing to give defendant's instruction No. 23 is assigned as error. It reads as follows: "I also charge you that, if you find from the evidence that plaintiff was using said bar in a careless and negligent manner, being on the wrong side thereof, and while so using the same received the injury of which he complains, then you must return a verdict for the defendant." This instruction is not law. It would make no difference how negligently the plaintiff might have been using the bar at the time he was hurt if such negligence in no wise contributed to his hurt, and as to whether he was on the wrong side of the bar is a question for the jury when inquiring into the cause of the injury. The instruction announces no rule of law in a case of personal injury by the master to his servant. But the ground was fully covered in instruction No. 5, which was given and goes as far as the law will allow. Instruction No. 5 reads as follows: "If the injuries to plaintiff were caused proximately or exclusively by his own negligence or by the negligence of any of his fellow employés, the defendant is not liable."

When all the instructions given are read together and considered as a whole, we are satisfied they express the law, and could not have been prejudicial to the defendant.

Judgment and order affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1907.)

In Bank. Application for rehearing. Denied.

For opinion in District Court of Appeal, see 88 Pac. 587.

PER CURIAM. In denying a rehearing in this case the court desires to state more clearly a fact not so fully brought out in the opinion in the District Court of Appeal. The machine at which the plaintiff was injured was in the basement of the mill where there was very little light, and there is a decided preponderance of evidence that, standing in the position which he must occupy in operating the machine, the defendant could not see the defect which was the cause of his injury. In other words, there was not merely a conflict in the evidence, there was a preponderance of evidence to the effect that the defect in the machine was a latent defect, not obvious, and only discoverable by a careful inspection.

Mandamus—Public Officers—Discretion.

Petitioners requested a board of supervisors to fix the rate for the use of water for irrigation in addition to that established by former ordinance of the board, the proceeds of the additional rate to be used in replacement of worn-out pipe. The board denied the petition without prejudice, the order reciting that such replacement constituted reconstruction for which the law made no provision. Held, that the action of the board amounted to a refusal to add to the established rate, and to re-establish such rate until the future action of the board, which was a clear exercise of judgment concerning a matter within the board's discretion, which could not be controlled by mandamus.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by P. S. Berger and another to obtain a writ of mandate against William Justice and others, forming the board of supervisors of San Diego county. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

GRAY, P. J. This action is brought to obtain a writ of mandate directing the board of supervisors of the county of San Diego to act upon the merits of a petition asking said board to fix a rate for the use of water for irrigation, in addition to that established by a former ordinance of the board, adopted November 16, 1897, and already in force; the proceeds of the additional rate to be used only in the repayment of the cost of the necessary replacement by new pipe of worn-out pipe in the water system of the Sweetwater Water Company, a corporation, which had devoted its system to the sale and distribution of water. The court below sustained a demurrer to the petition for the writ of mandate, and the plaintiffs in said petition appeal from the judgment which followed.

It appears from the petition that the plaintiffs herein are inhabitants and taxpayers of said county, and are consumers of water for irrigation under said system, and are owners of irrigation easements thereunder annexed to the land owned by them; that the Sweetwater Water Company, a corporation, is engaged in the business of collecting and impounding the water to be distributed, and holds the title to the water system. The petition to the board of supervisors was made by the corporation and by some 25 persons who describe themselves as irrigators in said county under the said system. Upon the hearing of the petition, the board refused and declined to act upon the same, and embodied their action in the following resolution entered upon their record: "On motion of Supervisor Griffin, seconded by Supervisor Justice, it is ordered that the petition in this matter be denied without prejudice, on the ground that the petition asks for replacement of old worn-out pipe with new pipe, it appearing that such replacement constitutes reconstruction for which the law makes no provision." While the foregoing order may be said to be, in one sense, a refusal to act, yet it is equally true that the effect of it was to fix the former water rate as the established, continuing rate for which water should in the future be furnished, and in this sense it was an affirmative exercise of the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors under the statute, and not a mere refusal to act. The ground upon which they base their action is entirely immaterial. They refused to add to the established rate, and by this act re-established the rate at its former figure, where it is to remain until some future action may be taken on their part changing the same. This, in our judgment, is a clear exercise of their jurisdiction in the premises, and the action taken is a matter within their jurisdiction. The power of the board of supervisors in the premises being judicial, the courts cannot, on an application for a writ of mandate, direct or control the affirmative action of the board of supervisors taken within their said jurisdiction. The only thing the appellants are complaining of is that the board did not add to the original rate an amount sufficient to cover the cost of replacement of old worn-out pipe with new pipe. Whether they should do this or not was a matter clearly within their discretion under the statute. They have refused, and, on an application for a writ of mandate, the courts have no power to control their discretion. Such is not the office of the writ of mandate. The writ issues only to "compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office." Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. The only act enjoined by law upon the board of supervisors is to fix the rate. They had already fixed the rate, and in a more recent proceeding, in effect, ordered that the rate should remain as so formerly fixed.

For these reasons, we think the demurrer to the petition was properly sustained. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

HATTON et al. v. GREGG. (Civ. 313.)

1. Trial—View by Court.
Knowledge gained by the court by a view of the premises is independent evidence, to be taken into consideration by the court in determining the issues.

2. Waters and Water Courses—Accretion—Evidence—Sufficiency.
On an issue as to whether lands had been formed by imperceptible degrees on the bank of a river by the accumulation of material and by the recession of the river, evidence considered, and held to sustain a finding that such was the case.

Action by Kate H. Hatton and others against J. W. Gregg. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting the title of plaintiffs to a 10-acre tract of land.

The court, after finding plaintiffs to be the owners of the tract of land in controversy, and which is fully described by metes and bounds in finding 4, proceeds as follows: "That the plaintiffs, at the time of the commencement of this action, and long prior thereto, were the owners in fee of a large tract of land on the right bank of the Carmel river known as the 'West half of the Rancho Canada de la Segunda,' and from natural causes the lands particularly described in this finding have been formed by imperceptible degrees upon said bank by the accumulation of material and by the recession of the said Carmel river, and by this means, alone, the plaintiffs have become, and are, the owners of the lands described in this finding." (The italics are ours.) So much of the above finding as is italicized is attacked by the defendant as not being supported by the evidence, and in this connection he very correctly states in his brief that: "If this finding is justified by the evidence, the judgment should be affirmed, otherwise, it must be reversed, and a consideration of this question is the only point involved in this appeal."

The bill of exceptions is short, and, so far as it bears upon this question, is as follows: "Plaintiffs proved by competent evidence that at the time of the commencement of this action they and their predecessors in interest were, and ever since February 4, 1859, had been, the owners and in the possession of a large tract of land in Monterey county, Cal., known as the 'West half of the Rancho Canada de la Segunda,' and that the center of the Carmel river as it existed February 4, 1859, constituted the southern boundary of said rancho on said date. That at the time of the commencement of this action said Carmel river, which each year changes its course to some extent, had its course and channel south of where it was on said February 4, 1859, and that the land described in finding 4 is the land lying between the center of the channel of said river, as it existed February 4, 1859, and the center of said channel as it existed at the time of the commencement of this action, and is 10 acres in extent, and the same is formed of a loose sandy loam, bottom land, a sediment of the nature and formation of Ollason Island, and susceptible to the action of water. That said Carmel river is and always has been an unnavigable mountain stream, having an abrupt descent to the ocean, and during the summer months carrying very little water and is sometimes entirely dry, while during the winter months each year it is a torrential stream, carrying a large volume of water, and changes its channel to some extent. * * * The court went upon and viewed the lands and premises described in the complaint by consent of the parties upon request made by the attorneys for defendant in the following words, to wit: 'Mr. Lacey: Will your honor care to take the time to go over and look over that country? The Court: I am willing to do it. Mr. Lacey: The surveyors are prepared to go with you, and we will provide conveyances for you from Monterey. * * *' And the court then and there, accompanied by the said surveyors representing the respective parties, viewed the topography of the country generally, the land in dispute, its character, formation, and growth. The foregoing was all the evidence offered or received as to the issues involved in this case."

It is now urged that the court cannot predicate any finding of fact upon a view of the premises, or upon information gained from such view, and that, in this case, if we disregard such view of the premises, there is no evidence in the record to support the finding attacked. It must be confessed that the rule contended for by appellant as to the effect of a view of the premises is followed by the courts in some of the states (Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271 [Gil. 230]; Sasse v. State, 68 Wis. 530, 32 N. W. 849; Harrison v. Iowa M. R. Co., 36 Iowa, 623; Machader v. Williams, 54 Ohio St. 344, 43 N. E. 324; Neff v. Reed, 98 Ind. 341), and was at one time the rule in this state (Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607). In this last-mentioned case the question at issue was as to whether or not certain land was on the 28th day of September, 1850, swamp and overflowed lands. The jury, under the order of the court, had viewed the lands, and the court in its instructions told the jury that they were at liberty, and it was their duty, to give such examination made by them its due and proper weight in assisting them to determine the character of the lands on the 28th day of September, 1850, and that, if they found from the evidence of the witnesses and from their examination of the lands in controversy that it was such, on the 28th day of September, 1850, that it was rendered unfit for cultivation by reason of its overflow, it would be overflowed lands within the meaning of the act of that date. The court said: "These instructions are erroneous in so far as they authorized the jury to take into consideration the result of their own examination of the land in determining its character as swamp and overflowed, or otherwise. In authorizing the court to send the jury to view the premises in litigation it was not the purpose of the statute to convert the jurors into silent witnesses, acting on their own inspection of the land, but solely to enable them the more clearly to understand and apply the evidence. If the rule were otherwise, the jury might base its verdict wholly on its own inspection of the premises, regardless of an overwhelming weight of evidence to the contrary, and the losing party would be without a remedy by motion for a new trial." The opinion continues with more to the same purpose, but we have quoted this much at length in order to make clear the effect of the subsequent case of People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833. In People v. Milner, supra, the court, after discussing at length the case of Wright v. Carpenter, supra, and the cases of People v. Green, 53 Cal. 60, and People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 10 Pac. 169, which likewise treat of the character and effect of information received from a view of the premises, said: "It must be concluded, therefore, that the doctrine of Wright v. Carpenter, supra, has been set aside by the later utterances of this court." Absolutely the only doctrine laid down by Wright v. Carpenter, supra, is that knowledge obtained by an examination of the premises is not independent evidence that can be taken into consideration in determining the issues of the case. The language of the court in Wright v. Carpenter, supra, is: "These instructions are erroneous in so far as they authorized the jury to take into consideration the result of their own examination of the land in determining its character as swamp and overflowed, or otherwise." The doctrine that information obtained from a view of the premises is not independent evidence that can be taken into consideration in determining the issues of the case having been set aside, it follows, as night follows day, that such information is independent evidence that can be taken into consideration in determining the issues of the case. If, in a case where the question at issue was as to whether or not a certain parcel of land was swamp and overflowed land, and all the witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiff should so testify, and the court, without the examination of any witness on behalf of defendant, but with the consent of the parties, should visit and view the premises, and should there see that the land was rolling hill land, supporting a growth of oaks and other vegetation only grown on upland, it is difficult to reconcile with common sense a rule that would not permit the court to find the facts to be in accordance with what it saw with its own eyes. Both upon reason and the authority of People v. Milner, supra, we are constrained to hold that the knowledge gained by the court from a view of the premises is independent evidence to be taken into consideration by the court in determining the issues of the case.

It is next urged that, even if it be conceded that a view of the premises furnishes independent evidence, yet, from the nature of things, the court could not, from such examination, find that the land in dispute had been formed from natural causes, by imperceptible degrees, by the accumulation of materials, or by the recession of the bank of Carmel river. We are unable to agree with this contention. The record shows that uncontradicted evidence was given to the effect that between February, 1859, and October 18, 1902, the channel of the Carmel river had moved south to such an extent that the land in dispute, containing 10 acres, now lay between the channel as it existed in February, 1859, and as it existed October 18, 1902; that said land was formed of loose, sandy loam, bottom land, a sediment of the nature of Ollason Island; that said Carmel river is, and always has been, an unnavigable mountain stream, having an abrupt descent to the ocean, and during the summer months carries very little water and is sometimes entirely dry, while during the winter months of each year it is a torrential stream, carrying a large volume of water, and changes its channel to some extent. It is thus apparent that, during a period of practically 40 years, the change has been sufficient to form or expose a strip of land containing 10 acres only. The statement that, "during the winter months of each year, it is a torrential stream, carrying a large volume of water and changes its channel to some extent," suggests the idea that the change each year is but little; at any rate that it is not great. The fact that the land is a loose, sandy loam, and is a sediment, and that the channel of the river has changed each year to some extent, so that in 43 years a strip of land containing 10 acres has been formed along the original boundary of plaintiffs' land, suggest at least the probability that the channel of the river has been gradually changed by the slow, gradual, and imperceptible deposit of sedimentary matter by the natural action of the river and the waters thereof. Especially is this so in the absence of any word of evidence that there had been any sudden change in the channel of the river, or in the land bordering thereon.

Now, with these undisputed facts in evidence, the court could, upon a view of the premises, not only verify the evidence as to the character of the land in dispute as to being a sedimentary, sandy loam, but could observe the slope of the land from the original boundary of plaintiffs' land to the river, and the character and relative age of the brush or other vegetation upon the land, and any other characteristics tending to throw light upon the manner of its formation. From such facts, in connection with the length of time, 43 years, that it has taken the river to change its channel to the extent that it has, and that it has changed its channel to some extent each year, the court might reasonably conclude that the land in dispute has been formed by natural causes, by imperceptible degrees, by the accumulation of materials, and by the recession of the river.

HATTON et al. v. GREGG. (Civ. 314.)

1. INJUNCTION—ACTION—ISSUES—PROOF.
In a suit to restrain defendant from cutting down trees on plaintiffs' land, a defense that, defendant being an owner of land bordering on the same stream as that on which plaintiffs' land bordered, but opposite to, and below, plaintiffs, he had the right to cut down the trees to prevent obstructions to the flow of the stream, was unavailable to defendant where the answer merely denied plaintiffs' ownership of the lands claimed by plaintiffs and the destruction of the trees.

2. SAME—WASTE—DESTRUCTION OF TREES.
Where one cut down trees on the land of another, and threatened to continue to do so, an injunction would lie to restrain such injury.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 105.]

3. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — FAILURE TO MAKE FINDINGS.
The failure to find on an issue, the finding upon which might have the effect of making erroneous a judgment fully supported by the findings made, is not ground for reversal unless it be shown that evidence was submitted in relation to the issue, sufficient to authorize such a finding as would have the effect to make erroneous the judgment rendered.

4. INJUNCTION—ACTION—ISSUES—PROOF.
In an action to restrain defendant from cutting down trees on plaintiffs' land, the defense of an easement was not available to defendant where not pleaded.

Action by Kate H. Hatton and others, minors, by Kate H. Hatton, their guardian, against J. M. Gregg. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment enjoining defendant from destroying plaintiffs' fences on certain described lands of plaintiffs, and also from cutting down, digging up, removing, or destroying any willow trees, brush, or undergrowth standing or growing on plaintiffs' said lands. The lands of plaintiffs involved in this action include the same land in controversy in the action between the same parties and numbered 313, and the appeal in which we have this day determined. The two actions were tried together, and the same point as to the effect of a view of the premises by the judge of the trial court is made in this action as was made in the action No. 313, and for the same reason we hold the point untenable. Other points are also made by the appellant upon this appeal.

The complaint, among other things, alleges that defendant, at various times in the months of August and September 1902, cut down, dug up, and destroyed willow trees and brush standing and growing on the lands of plaintiffs bordering on the bank of Carmel river, and threatens to continue so to do. This allegation is followed by others to the effect that the destruction of said trees and brush will weaken the northerly bank of said river, and tend to cause it to be washed away and destroyed, and, if it should be washed away, the waters of said river would immediately flow onto and over about 200 acres of plaintiffs' land. The court found in accord with these allegations of plaintiffs' complaint.

The principal contention of defendant, other than the one in regard to the effect of the view of the premises by the court, is that no injunction should have been granted against defendant for the reason that, being an owner of land bordering on the same stream opposite to and below the lands of plaintiffs, he had the right to cut down the trees and brush growing along the stream upon the land of plaintiffs to remove and prevent obstructions to the flow of the stream. It is a complete answer to such contention that no such defense was pleaded by the defendant in his answer to the complaint of plaintiffs. Defendant contented himself with denying the ownership by plaintiffs of the lands claimed by plaintiffs, and the destruction by defendant of the trees and brush, and certain other allegations of the complaint. There is not one word in his answer to suggest the idea that he did cut down the trees and brush, or that the removal or cutting down of the trees was necessary, or was done for the purpose of removing or preventing any obstructions to the flow of the stream, or that he claimed the right so to do for such purpose. If it be conceded for the purposes of this case that a riparian owner has the right to go upon the land of an upper or opposite riparian owner, and cut down trees and brush naturally growing thereon along the bank of the stream to prevent the collection of drift wood, which would obstruct the channel of the stream, and ultimately divert the water therefrom to the damage of such riparian owner, the facts giving such right constitute affirmative matter, which must be pleaded by a defendant sued for cutting down the trees upon plaintiffs' land (section 437, Code Civ. Proc.).

Appellant attacks certain findings of the court, as not supported by the evidence, that defendant had dug up or destroyed any trees, and had enlarged the channel of the stream, and that what defendant did would cause said channel to carry a larger volume of water than usually carried by it, and that the acts performed by defendant would in any manner injure and weaken the bank of the stream and tend to cause it to be washed away and destroyed. Without discussing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain each of the findings thus attacked, it is sufficient to say that it was proved, found by the court, and admitted by defendant that he had cut down the trees and brush along the banks of the stream found by the court to be a part of the lands of plaintiffs, and, unless restrained by the order of court, would continue so to do. This finding justifies, we think, the judgment of the court as regards the cutting down and destruction of the trees and brush, and renders any error, if there be any, as to any of the other findings attacked immaterial. An entry upon land, and digging up and removing fruit trees growing upon it, is waste and an injury to the inheritance, and are acts which a court of equity may enjoin. Silva v. Garcia, 65 Cal. 591, 4 Pac. 628. In Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 544, it was said that "the cutting, destroying, and removing of growing timber on the premises in controversy constituted, without other matter, sufficient ground for the issuance of the writ." To the same effect are United States v. Guglard (C. C.) 79 Fed. 23, and Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107. A threatened injury to real property in the nature of waste may be restrained. More v. Massini et al., 32 Cal. 590. If the evidence sustains the finding of the trial court upon findings that fully support the judgment, it is immaterial whether other findings objected to are sustained by the evidence or not. Spaulding v. Bradley, 79 Cal. 449, 22 Pac. 47; Clavey, Adm'r, etc., v. Lord, 87 Cal. 413, 25 Pac. 493. The cutting down of the trees and brush growing upon the lands of plaintiffs was waste and an injury to the freehold, and as the defendant threatened to continue so to do the court properly restrained him from so doing.

As the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, and the court made no findings thereon, it is urged that this was error. But it is well settled that the failure to find upon an issue, the finding upon which might have the effect of making erroneous a judgment fully supported by the findings made, is not ground for reversal, unless it be shown that evidence was submitted in relation to the issue sufficient to authorize such a finding as would have the effect to make erroneous the judgment rendered. Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; Rogers v. Duff, 97 Cal. 66, 31 Pac. 836; Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343, 32 Pac. 320; Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Wise v. Burton, 73 Cal. 174, 14 Pac. 683. In this case it was proved without contradiction that the acts upon which the action was predicated were committed within three months before the action was commenced. It is true that defendant introduced evidence that, for the five years immediately preceding the year 1902 (the year of the trespass and action), he had each year gone upon the lands found by the court to belong to plaintiffs, and cut the trees and brush growing thereon, but, if he intended thereby to prove the right to an easement upon the lands of plaintiffs, he had pleaded no such right, nor the appropriate section of the statute. He pleaded subdivision 2 of section 338, and section 343, Code Civ. Proc., and in the state of the pleadings the only effect of his evidence was to show that on previous occasions he had committed similar acts of waste upon the lands of plaintiffs. The court did not err to the prejudice of appellant in failing to find upon the plea of the statute of limitations.

It is urged that the judgment is erroneous in that it allows plaintiffs costs in the sum of $50.95, although nothing is said as to costs either in the findings of fact or conclusions of law. Costs are incident to the judgment, and in equity cases, such as this, may be allowed to the one party or the other in the discretion of the court. In this case the decree allowing costs to the plaintiffs appears to have been signed by the judge of the court in open court. In such a case we know of no rule requiring the court, either in its findings of facts or conclusions of law, to make an award of costs.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur; HARRISON, P. J.; COOPER, J.

SHANKS & MARCH v. MICHAEL.

(Civ. 297.)

1. Brokers — Exchange of Property — Commissions—Right to Recover.

Where defendant contracted to pay brokers one-half commissions for making an exchange of defendant's property for that of another, in order to entitle plaintiffs to recover they were bound to prove either that an actual exchange had been consummated, or a valid agreement made therefor.

2. Husband and Wife — Agency of Husband.

Where an agreement for the exchange of property belonging to a married woman was not signed by her and she was not shown to have ever given any authority in that behalf to her husband, who affixed her signature to the contract, the fact that she saw the instrument before and after it was signed and expressed herself as satisfied therewith was not equivalent to an execution by her, nor an authority warranting its execution in her behalf.

3. Same—Written Authority—Ratification.

Authority could not be conferred by a married woman on her husband to enter into a contract for the exchange of her property, except by an instrument in writing as provided by Civ. Code, § 2309, nor could the husband's contract, executed in his wife's name without authority, be ratified except in the same manner as provided by section 2310.

4. Exchange of Property—Unilateral Contract—Enforcement.

Where a contract for the exchange of property belonging to a married woman was signed on her behalf by her husband without authority, the agreement was unilateral and unenforceable by either party in the absence of a tender of conveyance by her.

5. Brokers — Exchange of Property — Performance of Commission.

Commissions to a broker are earned by his finding a sufficient purchaser ready to enter into a valid contract for the purchase on the terms fixed by the owner.

Action by Shanks & March against W. T. Michael. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. Vincent Hannon, for appellant. John W. Kemp and Kemp & Collier, for respondents.

ALLEN, J. Action by the plaintiffs to recover of defendant broker's commissions upon a written agreement. Findings and judgment for plaintiffs, from which judgment, and an order denying a new trial, defendant, W. T. Michael, appeals.

The complaint avers that on June 19, 1905, the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiffs whereby said defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs, as their commission for making an exchange of certain properties, one-half the usual commission, and that it was agreed that the usual commission for making such sales was $650. Judgment was asked for $325. The answer denies that any exchange of properties between defendant and the other party was ever made or effected, or any services rendered by plaintiffs in effecting an exchange of defendant's property; admits the execution of a contract to pay commissions, but alleges that it was executed upon the condition that an exchange should be consummated upon certain conditions, and avers that it was not consummated, owing to the inability of the other parties to meet the terms and conditions of the exchange. Upon the trial the court found all of the allegations of the complaint to be true, and that it was not true that the agreement to pay the $325 was dependent upon the consummation of the exchange, nor that the exchange was not consummated because of the inability of the other contracting party to meet the terms and conditions of the contract. The contract to pay these commissions reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 19th, 1905. I hereby agree to pay Shanks & March one-half the usual commission paid on the sale of Real Estate in Los Angeles as full compensation for negotiating deal with Ina E. Van Norman. Usual commission being understood to be 5 per cent on first $1000 and 2½ per cent on values above one thousand. W. T. Michael.

"We agree to accept the above rate as full compensation for our services in the above transaction. Shanks & March."

It will be noted that the complaint alleges that the agreement to pay was for commissions for making the exchange of defendant's property with one Van Norman, and the agreement also purports to pay one-half of the usual commission paid on the sale of real estate. It follows, therefore, that to entitle plaintiffs to recover under their complaint an actual exchange should have been consummated, or a valid agreement therefor made. In the latter event, plaintiffs would have been entitled to the commission even had the parties thereafter rescinded the agreement, or either party made default in compliance with its terms. It is conceded that no actual transfer was consummated, and the record shows that no valid agreement for an exchange was ever made. Plaintiffs, who drew the contract claimed to be an agreement of sale, as well as the defendant who signed the same, represented the property sought to be exchanged for defendant's property as the estate of one Ina E. Van Norman, wife of L. E. Van Norman, and, nothing to the contrary appearing, it will be accepted that Mrs. Van Norman owned the property. This agreement for the exchange of Mrs. Van Norman's property was not signed by her, neither is it shown that she ever gave any authority in that regard to her husband, who affixed her signature thereto. It does appear, however, that she was satisfied with the exchange, and saw the instrument before it was signed and afterwards, and expressed herself as satisfied therewith. But this is not the equivalent of an execution by her, nor an authority warranting its execution in her behalf. She was not present when it was signed, nor was her name subscribed at her request, as in Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566. The authority to enter into such a contract could only be in writing (Civ. Code, § 2309), or could be ratified only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority (Civ. Code, § 2310). There is nothing in the record tending to show any acts of Mrs. Van Norman which would estop her to deny the execution of the instrument were she so inclined. The agreement, therefore, was unilateral, and, in the absence of a tender of conveyance by Mrs. Van Norman, was unenforceable by either party. Hay v. Mason, 141 Cal. 722, 75 Pac. 300. The procurement by a broker of an oral agreement to exchange land not thereafter consummated is not the negotiation of an exchange, and, in the absence of a special contract, will not entitle such broker to a commission. We find no contract here other than the one alleged to have been executed upon the making of an actual exchange, which allegation is borne out by the language of the agreement itself. We find no evidence in the record tending to sustain the finding that the exchange of property was effected, or that services were rendered in effecting an exchange of properties. The commission of a broker is earned by finding a sufficient purchaser ready to enter into a valid contract for the purchase upon the terms fixed by the owner. Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 266. Mrs. Van Norman is not shown to have been willing to make such valid contract, nor, in fact, is it shown that any opportunity was presented to her by plaintiffs so to do. Plaintiffs having performed no services in effecting an exchange, and no other consideration for the promise appearing, there was an entire absence of consideration for the agreement sued on.

Entertaining these views, it is unnecessary to pass upon the other questions presented by appellant, some of which possess merit.

The judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 11, 1906.)

1. ASSOCIATIONS — BY-LAWS, CONSTITUTION AND RULES—EFFECT.

The constitution, rules, and by-laws of a voluntary unincorporated association constitute a contract between the association and its members, governing the rights and duties of the members as between themselves and in their relation to the association with reference to all matters affecting its internal government and the management of its affairs.

2. BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS—MEMBERSHIP.

Membership in a social or beneficial association organized for the amelioration or improvement of the conditions under which its members obtain their livelihood is in itself a personal right, the enjoyment of which the holder is entitled to protect against any unauthorized act or proceeding on the part of his fellow members, either as individuals or in their official or collective capacity, by which his enjoyment of such right will be impaired or destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Beneficial Associations, §§ 8-21.]

3. SAME—EXPULSION—BY-LAWS.

The constitution of a beneficial association provided that the giving out of information concerning the business transacted by a local division contrary to the order of the division should entail a fine, suspension, or expulsion, and that any member who divulged the quarterly password for any purpose other than to enter meetings should be expelled. Another provision declared that the president should have power to fine any member who in any way disturbed a meeting while in session, and for "all other offenses" the executive board should have power to impose a fine not exceeding $15. Held, that the association had no power to expel a member for holding secret meetings and conspiring against the welfare of the association and its president in particular.

4. SAME — EXPULSION — PROCEEDINGS — DEFAULT.

Where a beneficial association had no jurisdiction to expel a member for alleged conspiracy against it, the member's failure to appear at the hearing appointed to try him on such charge did not confer on the association authority to enter a judgment of expulsion.

5. SAME—APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE.

Where a beneficial association had no power to expel a member for conspiracy against it, the affirmance of an order of expulsion on an appeal taken to a higher tribunal within the society did not validate the order of expulsion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by George Dingwall to compel the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employés of America and others to restore petitioner to membership. From a judgment granting the writ, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. W. Hutton, for appellants. Weil & Lippitt and A. A. Sanderson, for respondent.

HARRISON, P. J. Appeal from a judgment granting plaintiff's application for a writ of mandate, commanding the appellants to restore him to membership.

The Amalagamated Association of Street Railway Employés of America is a voluntary unincorporated association of men employed by various street railway companies in the United States, associated together "to organize division associations, and place the occupation of street railway employés upon a high plane of efficiency, intelligence, and skill; to encourage the formation in division associations of sick benefit funds; to establish schools for imparting a practical knowledge of modern and improved methods and systems of transportation and trade matters generally; to encourage settlement of disputes between employés and employers by arbitration; to secure employment and adequate pay for work; to reduce the hours of daily labor; and by all legal and proper means to elevate the moral, intellectual and social condition of its members."

The appellant herein, Division No. 205 of said Amalgamated Association, is a subordinate or local division thereof, composed of about 2,700 men employed by the various street railway companies of San Francisco. The respondent was elected a member of the appellant August 12, 1901, and by virtue thereof became a member of the parent association. He continued to remain such member until December 16, 1902, when he was expelled therefrom in the manner hereinafter stated. June 19, 1902, he was elected secretary-treasurer of the appellant, and acted as such officer until his said expulsion. December 8, 1902, certain members of the appellant presented to its executive board charges in writing against the respondent, charging him and four other members "with violating their obligations, with holding secret meetings together, and therein conspiring against the welfare of the Union and R. Cornelius, its president, in particular." Upon receiving these charges the executive board ordered a trial of the respondent to be had thereon at 8 o'clock p. m. on December 13th, and a copy of the charges was duly served upon him. Prior to that time he requested that he be represented at the trial by counsel, and that a shorthand reporter be admitted to take testimony, but such requests were denied by the board upon the ground that to grant them would be in violation of its rules, and he thereupon refused to appear at the trial. The executive board, however, proceeded with the trial in his absence, and afterwards reported to the appellant that it found the respondent guilty of the charges against him, and recommended that he be expelled from the organization. On December 16th, at a meeting of the appellant, the report was presented, approved, and a resolution for his expulsion adopted, and since that time the respondent has been denied the privileges of membership in the appellant. After such expulsion he took an appeal as provided in the constitution and rules of the association, and prior to the commencement of this action had exhausted all the remedies provided thereby. His appeal was denied, and the order of expulsion affirmed.

The constitution and general laws of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employés of America, by which the appellant is governed in exercising control over its members, contain the following provisions for the expulsion of a member, and no others, viz.:

"Sec. 69. All business of the local division must be strictly private from persons outside of the association, unless publication be authorized by the local division, and persons giving out information contrary to the Local Division shall be fined, suspended or expelled.

"Sec. 70. Any member who divulges the quarterly password for any purpose other than to enter the meetings shall be expelled."

The appellant has also enacted the following by-law:

"Sec. 62. The President shall have power to fine any member who in any way disturbs a meeting while in session, but for all other offenses the executive board shall have the power to impose a fine according to their judgment. Such fine not to exceed fifteen dollars ($15), and no member shall be entitled to his working card until all dues, assessments and fines are paid."

The record also shows that there are certain other provisions in the by-laws for the impeachment and removal from his office of any officer who may be guilty of an infringement of the provisions of the constitution and by-laws, but as the proceeding herein was against the respondent in his capacity as a member, and not for any official delinquency, these provisions have no application.

The appellant has assigned many errors on the part of the superior court at the trial herein, and the parties to the appeal have discussed in their briefs many questions arising thereon, but from the conclusion which we have reached upon one proposition, which underlies the entire proceeding, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other questions.

The constitution and rules and by-laws of a voluntary unincorporated association constitute a contract between the association and its members, and the rights and duties of the members as between themselves and in their relation to the association, in all matters affecting its internal government and the management of its affairs, are measured by the terms of such constitution and by-laws. Membership in a social or beneficial association is in itself a personal right, especially when the purposes of the association include the amelioration or improvement of the condition under which the members obtain their livelihood, and the holder of such right is entitled to be protected in its enjoyment against any unauthorized act or proceeding on the part of his fellow members, either as individuals or in their official or collective capacity, by which his enjoyment of such right will be impaired or destroyed. The right of a member to retain his membership is subject to the terms and conditions contained in the constitution or articles of association, and such by-laws or rules of conduct as may be adopted under these provisions, and, whenever it is sought to deprive him of his membership, he has the right to insist upon a strict observance of the proceeding therefor which may have been prescribed in such articles or rules.

Under the provisions of sections 69 and 70 of the constitution of the appellant above set forth, its right to expel a member is provided for certain offenses, none of which is included in the charges which were presented against the respondent herein, and by section 62 of the by-laws, a right is given to the president to fine a member for disturbing a meeting while in session. But for "all other offenses" the appellant has declared, in section 62, that the executive board shall have the power to impose a fine "according to their judgment" not to exceed $15. The parties to the association having by agreement thus limited and declared the penalty to be imposed for all offenses, it was not within the power of the appellant to impose a different penalty for the offense with which the respondent was charged. See Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court, 62 Mich. 110, 28 N. W. 802; Meurer v. Association, 95 Mich. 451, 54 N. W. 954. By enumerating certain offenses for which the penalty of expulsion may be imposed, the right to inflict such penalty for any other offense is impliedly excluded, and the further provision that for "all other offenses" the penalty shall be a fine not to exceed $15 is a positive declaration that the only penalty which could be imposed upon respondent for the offenses with which he is charged is such pecuniary fine.

The failure of the respondent to appear at the hearing on December 13th did not confer upon the appellant any further authority than was given by its constitution and rules. The charges served upon him contained no proposition for expulsion, and as he had the right to assume that the only penalty would be a fine within the limits prescribed by the above by-law, he may have been willing to submit his case to the determination of the executive board upon such proof as might be presented in support of the charges.

The affirmance of the order of expulsion upon the appeal taken therefrom by him did not validate the order. If provision was made by the association for any review of the proceeding, it was incumbent upon him to exhaust his remedies within the association before making application to the courts, but, as the order of expulsion was void, by reason of a want of jurisdiction in the appellant to make it, its affirmance did not give it any vitality.

The action of the appellant in expelling the respondent from its membership was therefore without authority, and the order of the superior court directing that he be reinstated in his membership was correct.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, J.; HALL, J.

Ex parte RICE. (Cr. 48.)

HABEAS CORPUS—GROUNDS FOR RELIEF—LOCALITY OF OFFENSE.

Where a complaint charges the violation of a city ordinance and shows that the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, a writ of habeas corpus will not be granted to one arrested thereon, merely because it is alleged that the place where the offense was committed was not within the limits of such city, as that question cannot be decided on application for a writ of habeas corpus.

George S. Hupp and H. Steiglitz, for petitioner. John E. Daly, and Carl Monk, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. The petitioner, Rice, was arrested under a warrant from the recorder's court of the city of Long Beach, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, which warrant was based upon a complaint charging that the defendant did commit a misdemeanor, in that he "did then and there willfully and unlawfully commence and proceed with the erection or construction of a building within the limits of the city of Long Beach without first procuring a permit so to do, thereby violating ordinance 181, section 3, of the said city of Long Beach, all of which is contrary to the forms of the ordinances adopted and approved," etc.

It is contended by the petitioner, and some evidence was offered on the hearing of the petition to show, that the house alleged to have been constructed contrary to the ordinance and without a permit so to do, was not within the limits of the city of Long Beach. This contention is based on the alleged ground that proceedings were taken, under the statute, by the city of San Pedro to incorporate, as a part of the city of San Pedro, the territory upon which the house in question is situated, and that such proceedings by the city of San Pedro were instituted at a time when said territory was not embraced within the limits of the city of Long Beach, and prior to any proceedings taken on the part of the city of Long Beach to include the said territory upon which said house is situated within the limits of the latter city. It appears that both the cities named are claiming jurisdiction of the alleged territory upon which the house in question is situated, and I am asked to decide to which one of the two cities this territory belongs.

I am of the opinion that it is not competent to decide this question upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The complaint charges that the crime was committed within the city of Long Beach. No point is made by the petitioner against the sufficiency of the complaint, or as to the insufficiency of the warrant based thereon. The complaint shows that the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, in that it shows a violation of the penal ordinance within the territorial jurisdiction of the recorder's court. This gives to the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. The jurisdiction of the person of the defendant was obtained by his arrest under a warrant which is regular on its face. This is sufficient as against an application for a writ of habeas corpus. It appears, therefore, that the petitioner is legally held, and should not be discharged on an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

The petition is dismissed, and the petitioner is remanded to the custody of the city marshal.

GEAR v. FORD. (Civ. 269.)

1. Mines and Minerals—Quieting Title to Claim—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence in an action to quiet title to a mining claim held sufficient to sustain a finding that there was not $100 worth of labor performed or improvements made upon the mine by defendant during 1903, and that she did not resume work upon the mine in 1904, nor cause mining or labor to be resumed, nor make improvements thereon prior to January 16, 1904.

2. Same—Relocation—Burden of Proof.

After a valid mining location is made, the locator need not keep actual possession of the claim, but his right of possession continues until he in fact abandons or forfeits it by failure to do the work required by law, and the burden to prove such forfeiture or abandonment is upon him asserting it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mines and Minerals, § 101.]

3. Same—Discretion as to Method of Work.

Where a mining locator does work in good faith for the purpose of developing a mine, in strict compliance with the statute, a court cannot substitute its own judgment as to the wisdom and expediency of the method employed in the development in place of the owner's.

4. Same—Forfeitures—Burden of Proof.

A forfeiture of a mining location can only be established on clear and convincing proof of the locator's failure to perform the labor required by the statute, and the burden rests upon the party asserting such failure to prove it.

5. Same—Question for Jury.

Whether a prior location was forfeited as against an adverse location, and whether work was done for the purpose of developing the claim, or was adapted to that purpose, are questions of fact.

6. Same—Work Constituting Labor—Service of Watchman.

Where the original locator of a mining claim suspended work from 1900 until 1904, when an adverse location was made, money expended by her in employing watchmen for the premises was not a compliance with U. S. Rev. St. § 2324 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426], requiring not less than $100 worth of work to be performed or improvements made during each year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Mildred D. Gear against Mrs. M. A. Ford. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Street, for appellant. H. L. Gear and Geo. D. Gear, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title to a quartz mining claim situated in the county of Mariposa. The claim was originally located in 1879, and in 1893 came into the ownership and possession of defendant by mesne conveyances. The cause was tried by the court and it found: "That during the year 1903, * * * there was not one hundred dollars' worth of labor performed or improvements made upon the mine by the defendant. That in 1904 defendant did not resume mining work upon said claim, or cause mining or labor to be resumed, or make improvements thereon prior to January 16, 1904," on which day the court found that the land was vacant public mineral land of the United States, subject to location, and that on said day plaintiff entered upon the land and located the same as required by law. No question arises as to the validity of this latter location if the land was subject thereto. Judgment passed for plaintiff, from which, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The question of abandonment of the mine by defendant is not raised by pleading or by evidence. The sole question presented by defendant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding as to the work done by her on the mine in 1903, and the resumption of work in January, 1904.

The evidence was that subsequent to February, 1898, no work was done in the way of substantial improvement or development of the mine, except that some work of the value of about $45 was done by parties having a bond on the mine in 1900. Considerable money had been expended in development work up to 1898. At that time a shaft had been sunk and a house erected over it; there were nearby two small houses or cabins—a one-room and a two-room house used for dwellings; the house over the shaft contained an old threshing engine used for power, which cost, when placed there, $300, a hoisting apparatus, pumping gear, some mining tools and blacksmith's forge. But these tools and the forge, all the three-inch pipe and suction hose, the mortar, mine bell, and the belting had been taken away prior to 1903; the hoisting apparatus and pumping gear had been dismanteled and all that remained in use of the hoisting apparatus was the windlass and the rope and bucket used by the man left in charge to draw water from the partly-filled shaft for his personal use. The buildings were cheaply constructed, of not much value, and in 1903 had become quite dilapidated, though with slight repairs would have furnished shelter for workmen.

One Corey was sent to the mine at defendant's instance by her brother in 1894. Corey testified: "I was looking after the property there for the owners of the property, Mrs. Ford, or whoever had charge of it. I never did any mining there except prospecting with a pan, pick, and shovel around in the various places upon the mine outside of the mine, and anywhere on the ranch." It appeared that defendant bought the mine as part of a 600-acre ranch on which were some live stock, gardens, and orchards, the land mostly being suitable only for pasture. The gardens were partly on the mine and partly outside its boundaries, as were also the orchards. Corey remained there until the latter part of June, 1903. He was a tinsmith by trade, in poor health, and was not familiar with quartz mining. He testified: "It [his health] was not good. I was able to do work about the house getting my food and getting my meals and getting my wood and other work that had to be done appertaining to housekeeping, but I couldn't do much else. I would state that I did work in the garden, such as making ditches and getting water to irrigate, and that sort of work, but that was all I was able to do. That was all I did do in 1903." He was taken to the county hospital sick in the latter part of June. He testified: "The last work done on that mine by miners, according to my recollection, was about five years ago. That work was done by a company. Mr. Woodside * * * I can't recollect the names of all the partners. * * * I can't tell the nature of the work they did at that time because they were working underground. I didn't go underground at all. I didn't have any agreement with Mrs. Ford or Mr. Woodside as to what compensation I was to receive when I went on that property. Mr. Woodside said they wanted a man there to look after property around there, see that it wasn't lugged off. My principal work was done in the two, orchard and garden. * * * According to my understanding all of the upper garden, excepting one orange tree, was on the claim. The other garden was off the claim 100 yards more or less distant. I didn't perform any mining work in 1903 on that mine." He was paid for his work no stated compensation, but testified that he was paid "in cash, produce, and stores. I didn't receive in one year for the work or labor done on that mine, for either Mr. Woodside or Mrs. Ford, or both of them, as much as $75 in money, labor, clothes, or anything else." On cross-examination he testified: "While I was looking after that property I did prospecting—I did not know the boundaries of the claim. I would say that I did not do very much prospecting. * * * I prospected wherever I thought there was a chance of getting gold on the mine or off the mine or off the ranch. There is a quartz lead running through that section where I was living, but is not on the mine. It is on the hill outside of the mine, but no quartz lead cropping out on the mine that I know of. I wasn't prospecting for any vein. I was prospecting for surface gold. The most prospecting I did was in the creeks and gulches. I was prospecting mostly for placer gold. I sometimes took a pan out from off the mine and different places." He was asked if from January 1st to the time he left in June, 1903, his duties were the same as they had been, and answered: "Yes, sir; the orchard, the garden, and so forth. I done the most of the work on the garden irrigating and the ditches to carry water. I was still looking after the property that was in the engine house and at the hoist. I had the key to the building—I looked at them—I was there. I was looking after the property to see that no one stole it." Again he said: "I didn't do any mining or prospecting from the 1st of January, 1903, up to the last of June, 1903. I wasn't well. All I could do was to look after the irrigation. I looked after the buildings and improvements, and I lived on the mine." It appeared from the testimony of Mrs. Ford that she paid Corey $18 in cash, and his store bill, $36; in all $54 for his labor in 1903 to the end of June.

Mr. Woodside (defendant's brother) placed one Varian in charge of the property when Corey left, and gave him the key to the engine house. Varian lived about a half a mile distant from the mine, and for the month of July, 1903, looked after the property, but did no work on it. He testified that he was not there every day and sometimes he "sent the boy." For his services for the month he was paid $10. He then put one Gabriel Ferola in charge. He testified: "I told Gabriel to mine there, and stay there until he got further orders from Mr. Woodside or Mrs. Ford. I told him to look after everything that was on the mine." Varian retained the keys to such buildings as were under lock, and the others were fastened up.

Gabriel lived on the Prouty place, a mile and a half away from the mine. No agreement was made as to his compensation, but he testified that he went back and forth daily, except Sundays and holidays, to and from the mine in discharge of his duties, except also two or three days when he worked for a neighbor, until January 17, 1904, and then for the first time Varian delivered to him the keys to the buildings. This was the day after plaintiff's relocation of the mine. He testified that defendant paid him in April, 1904, $80 for eight months' work to January 1st, at the rate of $10 per month. He testified that he prospected on the mine with pick and shovel and pan, taking out in eight months $30 or $40; that he worked to see if he "could find a vein in some lead or something"; that Varian told him to prospect wherever he wanted to, and whatever gold he got to keep it, and to look after the buildings. He testified: "I didn't work all the time around the mine. I worked in the gulches and other places where there was water"; that most of the time he "got the rock or dirt right from the creek in front of the mine"; he "didn't get it away from the mine, from some other places"; that sometimes he "watered the trees so they would not be dry." Again he testified: "I did not do any other kind of mining than placer mining or crevicing. I can't do it. I am not able." It was testified to by several witnesses that Gabriel told them on January 16, 1904, "that he did not work on the mine, and that no one else ever did any work there for three years." This he denied. He testified that the work done by him after January 1st to January 16th was similar to the work he had done in 1903. Nothing in the way of resumptive work was done by defendant except by Gabriel Ferola.

There was considerable testimony given by persons who were familiar with the property, or who were mining experts, to the effect that in January, 1904, the mine showed no evidence of having been prosecuted or worked or improved in any way, either in or about the old workings or elsewhere, and that the buildings had not been repaired or improved for several years. The evidence showed that the buildings had become dilapidated, the foundations insecure from decay, that the engine was badly rusted, and that the little remaining personal property was of small value and not of a character likely to be stolen or carried away, and could readily have been removed to a place of safety. There was some evidence that the buildings might have been destroyed had a forest fire reached them, and that a watchman, if present, could have prevented it had such danger threatened. No such fire occurred, however. There was considerable testimony which has not been adverted to tending to support the findings, although not entirely without conflict. But we think sufficient has been pointed out to justify the conclusions of the court when the evidence is viewed in the light of settled rules of law and when applied to the United States mining statutes subject to those rules.

The following are some of the principles above adverted to: After a valid location has been made, the locator need not keep actual possession of the claim. His right of possession would continue until he has in fact abandoned it, or has forfeited it by failure to do the requisite amount of work within the prescribed time, and the burden of proving such forfeiture or abandonment is on him who would attack this right. Quigley v. Gillett, 101 Cal. 462, 35 Pac. 1040; Harris v. Kellogg, 117 Cal. 484, 49 Pac. 708. If the work was actually done in good faith for the purpose of developing the mine, the strict compliance with the requisites of the statute is established, and a court will not be permitted to substitute its own judgment as to the wisdom and expediency of the method employed for developing the mine in place of the owner. Mann v. Budlong, 129 Cal. 577, 62 Pac. 120; Wright v. Killian, 132 Cal. 56, 64 Pac. 98. The courts are reluctant to enforce forfeitures, deeming this class of penalties odious in law, and it is well settled by decisions that forfeiture cannot be established except upon clear and convincing proof of the failure of the former owner to have performed the labor to the amount required by law, the burden of proving which rests upon the party asserting it. Emerson v. McWhirter, 133 Cal. 510, 65 Pac. 1036.

Whether a prior location was forfeited, as against another adverse location, and whether work was done for the purpose of working the claim in controversy, or was adapted to that purpose, are questions of fact. Taylor v. Middleton, 67 Cal. 656, 8 Pac. 436; Altoona Q. M. Company v. Integral Q. M. Company, 114 Cal. 100–107, 45 Pac. 1047. The claim of defendant in her briefs is not that there was any failure on the part of the plaintiff to submit evidence bearing directly upon the question of forfeiture, but that the court drew wrong conclusions from the evidence. In support of her contention defendant places much reliance on the claim that the time and money expended for the watchman Corey, Varian, and Ferola as watchmen irrespective of any mining done by them, must be considered as falling within the purview of section 2324, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426], requiring that "not less than one hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year." Upon this feature of the case we are cited to Altoona Q. M. Co. v. Integral Q. M. Co., 114 Cal. 100, 45 Pac. 1047, and Hough v. Hunt, 138 Cal. 142, 70 Pac. 1059, 94 Am. St. Rep. 17. As the services of these men as watchmen have much to do with the point strenuously urged by defendant, the cases just cited should be examined in this sequence. The opinions in both of these cases were written by Mr. Justice Temple. The first-mentioned case was a bank decision, and in the second rehearing was denied. Taken together they come as near furnishing a guide to a right conclusion in the present case as may be found in our Reports. The importance of the question in the present instance calls for a full statement of what was said in the cases cited.

In the Altoona Case "the jury were told that it [work upon a mine in order to hold it] might consist in digging, etc., 'or, if the mine lie idle, it may consist of the services of a watchman or custodian in looking after the property and taking care of the same.'" Speaking of this the court said: "To constitute a general rule this would require some qualifications. If this sort of care was necessary to preserve tunnels, buildings, or any structures erected to work the mine, and which would be necessary in case work were resumed, we see no reason why it would not constitute work upon the mine as much as the erection of such structures in the first instance would. But if there was only the naked claim to be looked after, and a watchman were placed there merely to warn prospectors, and thus prevent a relocation, it would not be labor upon the mine within the sense of the statute. As applied to the facts of this case the instruction was not injurious, for it was not disputed that there were reduction works, houses, and barns, as well as tunnels and pits to be looked after."

Hough v. Hunt was a contest for a mining claim. Plaintiffs had been in possession several years of a quartz mining claim and had expended about $1,100 in developing the mine. They sunk a shaft upon the supposed lode some 25 feet, put up a winze, etc., and built a shed over their shaft. In 1898, according to the findings of the court, they performed only $25 worth of work towards working and developing the mine, and early in January, 1899, defendants entered upon the mine and relocated it as vacant ground. No claim was made that the mine had been abandoned, the sole claim being that plaintiffs had forfeited their rights by failure to do the requisite amount of work in 1898. The contention that the finding was not supported by the evidence, said the court, "depends entirely upon the fact that plaintiffs owned a house within the boundaries of the location and employed some one to live in it and paid such person $45 per month. It is claimed that such person at least took care of the property on the mine. It is not shown that he was employed to do anything of the kind, but, if that had been shown, the conclusion of the trial court is eminently sound, that such watching was not required and was not work on the mine. The cases must be rare in which it can justly be said that such money is expended in prospecting or working the mine. There may be cases where work has been temporarily suspended, and there are structures which are likely to be lost if not cared for, and it appears that the structures will be required when work is resumed, and that the parties do intend to resume work, in which money expended to preserve such structures will be on the same basis as money expended to create them anew. But this could not go on indefinitely. As soon as it should appear that this was done merely to comply with the law and to hold the property without any intent to make use of such structures within a reasonable period, such expenditure could not be said to have been made in work upon the mine. Much less could the mine owner bring picks, shovels, and things of that kind, upon the mine, and have some one watch them to prevent their being stolen, and have such cost of watching considered as work upon the mine."

In the case here the suspension of actual development work took place in 1898. The little work done in 1900 was hardly sufficient to break the continuity of this suspension. But, assuming that work was suspended in 1900, it could hardly be said to be "temporary" in the sense that word is used in the above opinion. Nor can it be said that the suspension was with the intention of renewing work within a reasonable time, or that there was any intention to use the buildings, for the purposes for which they were constructed, within a reasonable time, for they were never after 1900 so used and the claim was relocated four years afterwards.

Defendant does not claim, nor could she in view of the evidence, that the requisite work was done in the year 1903, without classing the work of watching the buildings and their contents as the work contemplated by the statute. The testimony is sufficient to show that the compensation paid the watchmen was for looking after the property. In our opinion the court drew correct conclusions from the evidence, and that the finding as to work and labor performed in 1903 is amply supported. The work of Ferola in January, 1904, was the same as in the latter part of 1903, and was not, in our opinion, such work as constituted "labor performed or improvements made" on the mine, and we think that the court correctly found that work was not resumed or improvements on the mine made by defendant in 1904, prior to plaintiff's location. Witness Packer, a mining engineer, and deputy United States surveyor, went to the mine with plaintiff and some other persons early on the morning of January 16, 1904, to assist in locating the mine. About an hour after their arrival Ferola came to the mine. Packer testified: "I asked him where he was going. He said he was going over the claim. I asked him if he was working on the claim. He said 'No.' I asked him what he was doing and he said he came over there to look and see if it was being jumped or not. Went back every day. I asked him if any assessment work had been done upon the claim to his knowledge. He said 'No'—that none had been done. I asked him several times, and Mrs. Gear also asked him in my presence, in Miss Miller's presence, if any work had been done or not, or improvements had been made. He stated positively that there had not. He spoke intelligent English. I was fully able to comprehend everything that he said. I spoke with him in broken Spanish also. I speak Spanish slightly. He told me he was there representing the interests of Mrs. Ford." Ferola was to some extent discredited, and the court may have disbelieved, as it had the right to do, some of his statements tending to show that he was prospecting and working on the mine some of the time he was there.

The written opinion of the court, appended to defendant's brief, shows that the learned judge gave the case very careful study before deciding it. He said: "I have examined the testimony in this case with great care, and am forced to the conclusion that defendant has failed to comply with the law, and that, when plaintiff made her location, the ground was open to relocation."

4 Cal. App. 571

1. JUDGMENTS—ERRORS—REVIEW—DIRECT AND COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A party to an action against whom errors have been committed in the proceedings and trial of the action may have such errors corrected on motion for a new trial or on appeal, but, if they are not so reached, they cannot be taken advantage of either by a direct or collateral attack on the judgment.

2. INFANTS—ACTIONS.

A minor has no further time than an adult within which to take the necessary steps for the correction of errors in proceedings or a judgment against him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Infants, § 317.]

3. JUDGMENTS—ERRONEOUS FINDINGS—ATTACK.

A judgment, after the lapse of time for a motion for a new trial and appeal, is not subject to attack in any form on the ground that the facts stated in the findings, and on which the judgment is based, are not true.

4. INFANTS—GUARDIAN AD LITEM—APPOINTMENT—PRESUMPTION OF SERVICE.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem for minor defendants will be presumed to have been based on a showing that the minors had been duly served with process, which order will, therefore, be sustained until reversed on a motion for a new trial or on appeal.

5. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF GUARDIAN.

The alleged misconduct of a guardian ad litem in failing to adduce evidence to sustain the title of his minors to certain property in controversy, which he knew existed and could have been produced on the trial, is unavailable in an action to set aside a judgment against the minors.

6. SAME—JURISDICTION—GUARDIAN AD LITEM—APPOINTMENT.

In an action against certain minors, the jurisdiction of the court over them became complete on the service of summons on them, which jurisdiction could be devested only by some proceeding that dismissed them from the action, and hence the fact that a guardian ad litem was prematurely appointed was not a jurisdictional defect.

7. JUDGMENTS—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JURISDICTION.

Whenever a judgment of a court of record is collaterally attacked, it will be presumed that the court acquired jurisdiction of the defendant, unless the judgment roll shows the contrary on its face.

8. SAME—FRAUD.

A defendant against whom judgment has been rendered may maintain a suit in equity directly attacking the judgment for fraud of the plaintiff extrinsic the record action, but the fraud, laches, or blunders of the defendant or his attorneys will not afford the defendant any basis of relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 836-840.]

9. APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—PROCESS—SERVICE—PROOF.

Where the affidavit of service of summons is defective, it will be presumed in support of a judgment based thereon that the court received other evidence which established that service was properly made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by John Welsh and others against A. J. Koch and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants after the sustaining of demurrers to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. D. Richardson and Will M. Beggs, for appellants. F. J. Hambly and J. B. Kerwin, for respondents.

COOPER, J. The complaint in this case attempts to allege a cause of action against a great number of defendants. It contains allegations as to several separate causes of action, and covers transactions of many years' standing. It is a lengthy document, covering 162 folios of the transcript, and concludes with a prayer, asking: (1) That plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple of the real estate described in the complaint, and that defendants have no right or title thereto. (2) That the several judgments set forth in the complaint be declared void, and that each of defendants be barred and enjoined forever from asserting any claim under them. (3) That the plaintiffs' respective rights and interests in and to the real estate be ascertained and declared, and that they recover possession of the same. (4) That defendants and each of them be declared trustees of the real estate and compelled to convey it to plaintiffs. (5) That each defendant be required to set forth the portion of land held by him, and render an account of the rents, issues, and profits thereof. (6) For costs of suit. (7) For such further relief as may seem meet and proper. It thus attempts to state a cause of action in the one complaint to quiet plaintiffs' title to all the property described in the complaint as against all the defendants; a cause of action to recover possession of all the real estate, and to determine the respective rights of the plaintiffs thereto; a cause of action against each defendant for an accounting; a cause of action against each defendant as a trustee of the real estate held by him; a cause of action to set aside and annul four different judgments rendered in four different actions. The complaint was demurred to by the different defendants, the main grounds of demurrer being that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that it is ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible, for the reason that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether it is an action for the recovery of real property, or an action to vacate and annul certain judgments, or an action to set aside conveyances of real estate, or an action for the recovery of damages for the wrongful detention of real estate, or an action to quiet title to real estate, or an action for an accounting for rents, issues, and profits, or an action to establish a trust in real estate. The different causes of action as attempted to be stated were also demurred to upon substantially the same grounds. The court sustained the demurrers, and allowed the plaintiffs 10 days to amend, and, upon their declining to do so, judgment was entered against them. This appeal is from the judgment.

We are of opinion that the judgment should be affirmed. The learned judge of the court below rendered a written opinion, which discusses the matter fully, and which we hereby adopt. It is as follows:

"The complaint combines several causes of action, to wit, four to annul four judgments affecting the real property claimed by plaintiffs, and one to quiet the title of plaintiffs to those premises. The judgments were against Peter and John Welsh, the infant sons of Garrett and Mary A. Welsh, one of them being in favor of Garrett, two in favor of Mary, and one in favor of a purchaser from Garrett. One of them covered all the premises, and the others covered only parcels of the premises. The allegation of the complaint to the effect that in 1880 Peter and John were, ever since have been, and still are, the owners, etc., of the premises, is a palpable mistake, as Peter is alleged to have died before the commencement of the action, but as that allegation can readily be amended the mistake may be overlooked in passing upon the demurrer.

"For the purpose of deraigning the title of the plaintiff to the premises, the complaint alleges that in 1880 Garrett Welsh was the owner of the premises; that he conveyed the same to McGirr; that McGirr in the same month conveyed the same to Peter and John Welsh. The allegation of the death of Peter, and the descent of his title to two of the plaintiffs, together with the above conveyances, make out a prima facie title to the premises in the plaintiffs. But if the judgments above referred to are valid, they divested Peter and John of all the title, if any, that passed to them by virtue of the deed of conveyance executed to them by McGirr. The plaintiffs, therefore, assuming that the defendants will rely upon those judgments, proceed to attack them, and procure their annulment. All those judgments were rendered in actions to quiet the respective plaintiff's title to the premises or portions thereof, and Peter and John were the defendants in each case, and the title of the plaintiff in each case was by the judgment quieted. The first in point of time was in favor of Mary A. Welsh, No. 7,303, rendered in November, 1885, for a portion of the premises. The second was in favor of Garrett Welsh, No. 7,413, rendered in April, 1886, for all the premises. The third was in favor of Pfaukutchen, No. 8,091, rendered in October, 1888, for a portion of the premises. And the fourth was in favor of Mary A. Scully (formerly Welsh), No. 9,747, rendered in May, 1893, for two portions of the premises.

"There is no room for doubt, or even question, that, under the rules of procedure in force in this state, a party to an action against whom errors have been committed in the proceedings and trial of the action, may have such errors corrected on motion for a new trial or on appeal, and it is equally well settled that such errors cannot be corrected except in one of those modes of procedure, and, if not thus reached and corrected, they are beyond the reach of any attack, either direct or collateral.

"A minor has no further time than an adult within which to take the necessary steps for the correction of errors in the proceeding or the judgment, for the statute has not made infancy an exception.

"The times within which the direct attack upon the judgment, by motion for new trial or appeal or the like proceeding, may be made, having been prescribed by law, the judgment is not subject to attack after the the lapse of that time, either directly or collaterally, on the ground of error. The statute not having made any saving or exception in that regard on the ground of the infancy of a party, or his failure to discover an alleged error, those facts will not extend the time within which the attack must be made. It necessarily results that when the times for the making of the attack in the modes above mentioned have expired the parties to the action, and their privies, are as absolutely bound by the judgment as they would be had the alleged errors not occurred.

"The grounds upon which these plaintiffs attack the judgment of Garrett Welsh v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 7,413, other than the grounds that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of Peter and John Welsh, are as follows: That it was not true that Garrett Welsh was the owner of the premises at the commencement of the action, as alleged in the complaint therein; that Peter and John were then in truth the owners of the premises; that the court appointed a guardian ad litem for Peter and John Welsh when it did not appear that the summons had been served upon them within the state of California; that the guardian ad litem knew and could have proven that Peter and John were the owners of the premises, but neglected to offer evidence in proof of that fact, and stipulated that the facts in that case, No. 7,413, were the same as those which had been found in the action of Mary A. Welsh v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 7,303, when, in truth, the facts so found were not true, and were known to the guardian ad litem to be not true; that Peter and John had a good defense to action No. 7,413, but by the misconduct of the guardian ad litem he did not make the defense in their behalf. Some other grounds are averred, but they need not be particularly mentioned.

"This complaint alleges that the court in No. 7,413, both found and adjudged that Garrett was, and Peter and John were not, the owners of the premises, and accordingly adjudged that the title of Garrett be quieted as against the claims of Peter and John. It is obvious, without argument, that those facts were material facts in the case; that the principal issues in the cause rested upon them; and that, having been found in favor of Garrett, they could not be questioned or disturbed except upon a motion for a new trial, or upon appeal, based upon a bill of exceptions or statement, or some appropriate mode in the action itself, whereby the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of those facts was directly questioned. Doubtless cases are finally determined in which the best interests of minor defendants would be subserved by giving them their day in court after attaining their majority, and this may be one of such cases, but our courts have repeatedly and uniformly held that such a term in a judgment or decree against minors is unnecessary. Minors and adults alike have the benefits of, and are bound by, final judgments to which they are parties.

"It follows that judgments, after the lapse of time for motion for new trial and appeal, are not subject to attack in any form on the ground that the facts stated in the findings, and upon which the judgment is based, are not true. Were not this principle true, the judgment, instead of being a final determination of the matters in issue in a cause, would be the beginning of troubles.

"The appointment of the guardian ad litem was based, presumptively, upon the showing to the court that Peter and John were minors, and had been duly served with process, but, if in truth the showing in that regard was not sufficient, then, beyond the possibility of doubt, the order could have been attacked in the court below, or on appeal in that case, and, if found erroneous, would have been reserved. The order remains valid until reversed, and, if erroneous, it cannot be reversed in any other mode, and therefore is not subject to attack, either direct or collateral. This does not involve the question of jurisdiction of the defendant in the cause.

"The alleged misconduct of the guardian ad litem, in failing to adduce evidence to sustain the title of the minors, which he knew existed and could have been produced on the trial, if it be available as a ground for the reversal of the judgment, could have been presented to the court below, or on appeal. The matter has no relation to the jurisdiction of the court, either of the subject-matter of the action, or of the parties, nor has it any relation to the question as to the power of the court to render judgment in the action, quieting the title of Garrett Welsh to the premises, and the matter, therefore, is merely a matter of error, and as such could be taken advantage of only in the action itself by motion for a new trial, or on appeal.

"It will be observed, also, that the complaint does not allege that Garrett Welsh colluded with the guardian ad litem, or caused or procured the alleged misconduct on his part. The misconduct or neglect of a guardian ad litem is no different in legal quality and effect from like misconduct of counsel of either party to the action. Had the action been brought by Peter and John against Garrett to quiet their title against him, and had the misconduct or neglect of their attorneys resulted in a judgment for Garrett, we do not think that it would be claimed that, after the time for a motion for a new trial and for an appeal had expired, they could procure a judgment which would, in effect, amount to a reversal of the prior judgment. A successful attack upon a judgment upon such grounds as above has all the effects of a reversal, without granting a new trial of the action. Can it be successfully asserted that Garrett Welsh and his privies ought to lose the benefit of his judgment because the person representing Peter and John more than 15 years ago failed to make the defense to the action that he might have made? If that kind of attack upon the judgment can now be made, why may not Garrett George, the minor plaintiff in this action, at the expiration of 15 years from the entry of the judgment herein, attack it on the like ground, that his guardian ad litem had neglected or perhaps badly managed his case? At the utmost, such matter is a mere error or irregularity, to be corrected in the action, or motion for new trial, or on appeal. Had the guardian ad litem presented to the court in that case all the evidence in existence to prove the title of Peter and John, and had the court found, contrary to the evidence, that they did not hold the title, it would not be contended that the judgment, based upon that erroneous finding, could be attacked for that error more than 15 years after the judgment became final.

"It is alleged that, in Mary A. Welsh v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 7,303, the guardian ad litem, having been appointed on the day succeding the service of the summons upon them, was void, and that, therefore, the court did not acquire jurisdiction of them. The appointment may have been premature, and therefore irregular and erroneous—and upon that point we express no opinion—but the jurisdiction of the court over them became complete upon the service of the summons upon them, and could not have been divested except by some proceeding that dismissed them from the action. The attack upon that ground, whether it be considered as direct or as collateral, cannot be sustained.

"The complaint alleges that the judgment in Mary A. Scully v. Peter and John Welsh is void, and the attack seems to be based solely upon the ground of misconduct on the part of the guardian ad litem of Peter and John. But we have above held that an attack upon the judgment on that ground, at this time, and in the manner attempted by this complaint, cannot be sustained.

"The judgments in the cases of Garrett Welsh v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 7,413, and in Pfaukutchen v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 8,091, are attacked on the ground of the want of evidence of the service of the summons upon the defendants. In respect to action No. 7,413, the complaint recites the affidavit of the service of the summons, and the affidavit does not state that Peter or John were served within this state. The complaint alleged 'that it nowhere appears in the said cause by any sort of evidence' that Peter and John were served in this state. In respect to action No. 8,091, the complaint recites the affidavit of service of the summons, and that does not state that Peter and John were served within the state, and the complaint contains also an allegation similar to the one last above mentioned. When an action is brought in a court of record, the first inquiry made by the court is whether it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and this question is decided either expressly or by necessary implication, the decision being in favor of its jurisdiction if the court proceeds with the trial of the action. The next question for decision is whether the court has acquired jurisdiction of the defendant, and in that regard the decision is made or stated expressly, as is sometimes, but not always, done, or it is based upon necessary implication, for the court will not proceed to the trial of the action unless its conclusion is that it has acquired jurisdiction of the defendant, in some of the accredited modes, such as the service of the summons upon the defendant, or his appearance in the action. The determination by the court of that question is as conclusive as of any other issue or question in the action. Hence comes the presumption, whenever the judgment of a court of record is attacked, either collaterally or, as in this case, that the judgment speaks the truth, and, if it be against the defendant, that the court had acquired jurisdiction of him unless the record—the judgment roll—shows to the contrary upon its face. Another principle to be noted in this connection is that in the attack, whether it be direct or collateral, the burden of proof is upon the attacking party. Reference is not here made to a motion for a new trial or an appeal, and we have left out of view in this discussion judgments showing upon their face that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of the defendants.

"It requires no citation of principles or authorities to prove that in a proper case the defendant may, by suit in equity, attack directly the judgment on the ground of fraud, or of the want of jurisdiction of the defendant. When the action is based upon fraud the fraud must be extrinsic the record action, and must be the fraud of the plaintiff. The frauds, laches, or blunders of the defendant or his attorneys will not afford the defendant any basis of relief. When the attack is based upon the alleged want of jurisdiction of the judgment defendant, the facts upon which the attack is made must be the extrinsic record, the obvious and controlling reasons being the presumption that the court decided that it had jurisdiction of the defendant, and the verity accorded to the record. We are not speaking of records that show upon their face that the court did not have jurisdiction of the defendant.

"The complaint alleges that, in the action of Garrett Welsh v. Peter and John Welsh, No. 7,413, the only evidence in the record of the service of the summons upon the defendants was an affidavit of service that fails to show that the service was made within this state. It is neither alleged that they were not served, nor that they were not served within this state. The presumption, in the absence from the record of anything in the nature of return of the summons, is that the defendants were duly summoned. In view of the presumptions above mentioned that attend such adjudgment, those allegations of the complaint cannot be dignified with the name of an attack upon the judgment. These remarks apply also to the attempted attack upon the Pfaukutchen judgment, No. 8,091.

"Brief reference may be made to some authorities in this state upon the matters just considered. In Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 461, the attack upon the judgment in question was collateral, but the ruling of the court is applicable here. The affidavit of service of the summons was, as here, defective. It did not show that a copy of the summons was delivered to the judgment defendant. The court, in overruling the objection to the judgment on that ground, stated that, as the court must have found from the return or other evidence that a copy of the summons was delivered to him, the presumption we have mentioned, 'will come to the aid of the judgment, and that, if the court, in rendering the judgment, erred in its conclusion in that respect, the error should have been taken advantage of by motion or by an appeal.'

"Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 40 Pac. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110, was an action in equity to set aside a judgment of divorce, the complaint alleging that the defendant had neither been served with the summons nor had appeared in the action, and that the judgment had been procured by the fraudulent practices of the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Temple in discussing the cause, with his usual clear, logical power, held that in such a case the attack, though not collateral, was always indirect; that the question to be determined was whether the judgment was procured by fraud or mistake; that the burden of proof of want of service of the summons was upon the plaintiff in the action in equity, although there was not in the record a return or proof of service; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a recovery in the action in equity.

"In this case there is no averment of the want of service, and the affidavit of service does show service upon the defendants in the actions in question, but does not state that they were served within the state. That case is much stronger for the plaintiff than this.

"The demurrer of Hemerlin, Skoden and wife, Turel, and Madronio, for whom Mr. Yoell appears, is sustained. Leave to plaintiff to file amended complaint within 10 days.

"Rhodes, J."

FISHER v. BARTHOLOMEW. (Civ. 334.)

1. HOMESTEAD — HUSBAND AND WIFE — SURVIVORSHIP.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, providing that, where a homestead is selected by the husband or wife during coverture and recorded, it vests on the death of either absolutely in the survivor, a husband surviving his wife, who died seised of real estate as her separate property after having during the marriage declared that the same was a homestead, acquires title thereto by operation of law, and no order of court is necessary to perfect his title.

2. SAME.

The title acquired by a husband surviving his wife who died seised of real estate and who had during the marriage declared that the same was a homestead is not affected by an order of the probate court, made in the administration of the wife's estate, authorizing the sale of the premises.

3. JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

An order of the probate court directing the sale of the real estate of a deceased wife leaving her husband surviving is not a conclusive adjudication that the premises had not been legally declared during the marriage to be the homestead of the wife and her husband, and a grantee of the husband may, in a suit to quiet title, brought by the purchaser at the sale ordered by the probate court, collaterally attack the order.

HALL, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought by plaintiff to quiet title to a piece of real estate in the possession of defendant, and situated in the city of San José.

From the record it apears that the property in dispute had been the separate property of one Nancy J. Packard, and at her death was the homestead of said Nancy J. and her husband, B. F. M. Packard, by virtue of a declaration made by her in due form, but was subject to the lien of a mortgage given to plaintiff by said Nancy J. and said B. F. M. Packard to secure a promissory note executed by the said Packards to plaintiff. Plaintiff deraigns his title through a sale made by the administratrix of the estate of said Nancy J. Packard, deceased, to plaintiff, under the order of the probate court, to pay the debts of said deceased, consisting of the duly allowed claim of plaintiff, founded upon said note and mortgage. The probate proceedings were regular in form, but it nowhere appears in any of such proceedings that the property sold, which was all the property appraised in said estate, was a homestead. Defendant deraigns title to the premises through mesne conveyances from B. F. M. Packard, the surviving husband of Nancy J. Packard, deceased.

The court below held that the title derived from the surviving husband prevailed as against the title derived from the probate sale, and we think this correct. Upon the death of either spouse the homestead selected from the community property, or from the separate property of the party making the declaration, or joining therein, vests absolutely in the survivor. Code Civ. Proc., § 1474. The survivor in such case takes his title by operation of law, and no order of court is necessary to perfect his title. In re Ackerman, 80 Cal. 208, 22 Pac. 141, 13 Am. St. Rep. 116; Sheehy v. Miles, 93 Cal. 288, 28 Pac. 1046; Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 Pac. 995; Vandall v. Teague, 142 Cal. 471, 76 Pac. 35; Saddlemire v. Stockton Savings & Loan Society, 144 Cal. 650, 79 Pac. 381. Neither can his title thus acquired be affected by subsequent orders of the probate court. In re Ackerman, supra; Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7, 21 Pac. 375; Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011; Estate of Fath, supra; Saddlemire v. Stockton S. & L. Society, supra. The order of the probate court, authorizing the sale of the premises, only operated upon the title then remaining in the estate of the decedent, which was nothing. Vandall v. Teague, supra.

If there was any question as to the validity of the homestead the purchaser at the probate sale would be in a position to litigate such question as against the claimant under the homestead, but no such question is raised in this case. The homestead is conceded to have been valid.

Appellant's contention virtually is that the order for the sale of the premises is a judicial determination that no valid homestead existed upon the property, and cannot be collaterally attacked. A like contention was made as to the force and effect of an order setting apart a probate homestead to the widow and the minor children of the decedent in Saddlemire v. Stockton Sav. & Loan Society, supra, and the court sustained the validity of the title of the surviving widow to the homestead selected by the husband, which vested in her at his death as against any title in the minor children derived from the order of the probate court setting apart the premises as a homestead for the use of the family of the deceased, although the petition to set apart the premises was filed by the widow, and prayed the court to set aside the premises for the use of the family of deceased, and named the widow and minor children as constituting such family.

The case of Ions v. Harbison, 112 Cal. 260, 44 Pac. 572, relied on by appellants, though in a part of its facts like the case at bar, in very essential matters is quite different. In Ions v. Harbison, the surviving husband was the administrator, and petitioned for the sale of the homestead premises without disclosing its homestead character, and, under the order thus obtained, sold the property to defendants, received the money, and applied the same to the payment of the note and mortgage on the premises, executed by himself and wife, and the funeral expenses and costs of administration incurred by himself. Upon this state of facts it was held that he and his grantee, with full notice of the facts, were estopped from questioning the title of the purchaser at the probate sale. No such facts exist in the case at bar. The fact found by the court that the surviving husband "neglected and refused" to administer upon the estate of his deceased wife does not estop him from claiming the homestead that vested in him on her death. There being no estate save the homestead, there was no estate requiring administration. In fairness to appellant it must be said that there is some language in the case just referred to, concerning the effect of the order of sale, which seems to support the contention of appellant, but we think a careful examination of the case shows that the real point of the decision is that, under the facts of the case, the surviving husband and his grantee with notice were estopped from questioning the title conveyed by the husband as administrator. At any rate the later cases herein cited establish the principle that must govern this case.

LUTY v. CRESTA. (Civ. 317.)

1. DEEDS—IDENTITY OF GRANTEE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the grantor of a deed had a sister and a daughter bearing the same name evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the conveyance was made to the sister and not to the daughter.

2. EVIDENCE — SECONDARY — PRELIMINARY PROOF.

Where a ledger had been destroyed, it was proper, as preliminary to proof of its contents, to ask a witness who had kept it whether or not it contained an account with a certain person.

3. APPEAL—WAIVER OF OBJECTION—ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY.

Where a witness was asked whether or not a ledger contained an account with a certain person and after answering affirmatively he volunteered a statement as to the nature of the account without objection from the adverse party and no motion was made to strike the testimony out and the witness was not cross-examined in reference thereto, its admission could not be complained of on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. A. D. Splivalo and Albert C. Aiken, for respondent.

COOPER, J. This is an action in ejectment to recover the premises described in the complaint, and damages for the withholding thereof. Findings were filed, upon which judgment was entered for defendant. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

In the year 1873 the "Abbey Homestead Association," a corporation, being the owner in fee of the premises, made a deed conveying the same to F. E. Luty, the father of the plaintiff, who died before the controversy in this case arose. In June, 1887, said F. E. Luty conveyed the property to Helen M. Luty. In October, 1899, Helen M. Luty conveyed the property to defendant, who thereupon went into possession, and was in such possession at the time of the commencement of this action. These deeds were all duly recorded, and show the title to be of record in the defendant. The contest in this case arises out of the fact that there are two persons bearing the name of Helen M. Luty, one the daughter of F. E. Luty, deceased, and who is the plaintiff here, and the other a sister. The sole issue before the court, and the one on which the case depended, was as to the identity of the Helen M. Luty named as grantee in the deed of F. E. Luty. The court found "that said Frederick E. Luty, in the year 1887, by deed of grant conveyed the premises described in the complaint to his said sister Helen M. Luty, the predecessor and grantor of said Cresta; * * * that said plaintiff's only and sole claim to said property arises in her contention that she is the grantee named in the said deed from Frederick E. Luty to Helen M. Luty, but said claim or contention is untrue and false and without foundation; * * * that said deed by Frederick E. Luty was made and actually and personally delivered to Helen M. Luty, sister of said Frederick E. Luty." The above-quoted findings are supported by the evidence. Helen M. Luty, the sister of deceased, testified that her brother, John S. Luty, was one of the officers and promoters of the "Abbey Homestead Association," which owned a large tract of land, of which the premises in controversy were a part; that, in consideration of his services, a portion of the Abbey Homestead property, of which the premises in controversy are a part, was awarded to said John S. Luty by the company; that by direction of John S. Luty the property so awarded to him was deeded to said F. E. Luty, who agreed with John S. Luty to hold the title subject to his directions; that John S. Luty died in the year 1886, having before his death requested F. E. Luty to convey to her the premises in controversy; that the deed, after being executed, was delivered to her in June, 1887, and placed of record; that she afterwards received the rents and paid the taxes on the property. The witness Annie H. Theller testified that she is well acquainted with Helen M. Luty, the sister of deceased, F. E. Luty, and that she knew F. E. Luty in his lifetime; that the sister lived with witness a part of the time, and was living with her in 1887; that shortly after the deed was recorded it was left in her possession by the sister for safekeeping; that she put it in her safe and kept it in her possession for a number of years until the sister, Helen M. Luty, went east, when witness delivered it to her.

Error is claimed because of the ruling of the court in overruling the plaintiff's objection to a question asked of defendant's witness Gardiner. The witness had testified that he was the book-keeper of F. E. Luty, deceased, in his lifetime, and was such up to the time of his death; that the ledger is made up from the daybook. It was then conceded that the ledger had been lost or destroyed, but it appeared that the daybook was at hand. Plaintiff's counsel then asked the witness the following question: "Q. Mr. Gardiner, did you keep the daybook and ledger for Mr. Luty? A. Yes, sir; I made the entries in them myself and personally made up the books, except a small portion, which was made by Mr. Luty himself. I am well acquainted with the contents of these books. Q. Was there any account in said ledger with the plaintiff Helen Maud Luty?" To which question objection was made because incompetent, and not the best evidence. The court overruled the objection, and the witness answered: "A. No, sir; there was no account with his daughter." The record then states: "The same question was asked the witness as to any account with Helen M. Luty, F. E. Luty's sister. Same objection and same ruling." The witness then, in answer to the question, stated that the ledger and daybook contained accounts with the sister, and proceeded, apparently without objection, to state that the books contained items charged against the sister for taxes on the land in controversy, and credits for rents received. The record then states: "At this point plaintiff's counsel requested the witness to step down and examine the daybook, which was in court pursuant to notice of defendant's attorney to produce the same on the trial of the case. Thereupon said witness stepped down and proceeded to examine said daybook to find the items he had testified to as being in the ledger, and he was not recalled."

It appears from this that the only objection was to the question as to whether there was any account in the ledger with the sister, Helen M. Luty. The witness could have answered this question "Yes" or "No." In the form in which the question was asked and the objection made, it was not objectionable. The ledger had been destroyed, and it was proper as preliminary to the proof of its contents, to show that it contained an account with the sister. The witness appears to have volunteered the answer as to what the account contained. No objection was made to it and no motion was made to strike out any part of the answer. The daybook was present from which the ledger had been made up, and, although plaintiff's counsel requested the witness to examine the daybook, which he did, no questions were asked concerning it. It evidently verified the testimony just given by the witness, but, if it were otherwise, the plaintiff's counsel had the right to cross-examine the witness fully with the daybook before them. As they did not take the trouble to ask to have the testimony stricken out, or to cross-examine the witness as to it, the plaintiff will not now be heard to insist upon a reversal of the case. Counsel should make objections clearly and specifically, and endeavor to overcome obstacles in the lower court, so as to present each question raised upon its merits. In this case the great probability is that the court below would not have allowed the witness to testify to the contents of the daybook, the book being present, if the proper objection had been made and the court's attention called to it.

We have examined other alleged errors, but we do not find anyone of them of sufficient importance to justify a discussion of its merits.

KEVANE v. MILLER. (Civ. 271.)

1. APPEAL — FINDINGS — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

When there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. SAME.

A conflict in the evidence on an issue of fact exists whenever there is such a substantial and material variance in the evidence as will sustain the determination of the trial court, regardless which way it may find therefrom.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—ACTS OF AGENT—UNFAITHFULNESS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover money alleged to be due from defendant to plaintiff by reason of the fact that defendant, while acting as plaintiff's special agent for the purchase of certain stocks, bought the stocks for $1,500, and demanded and received from plaintiff $2,900 as the alleged purchase price, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant purchased the stock as plaintiff's agent, and not on his own account for resale.

4. SAME—GRATUITOUS AGENCY.

Where defendant agreed, without compensation, to purchase certain corporate stock for plaintiff as his agent, defendant was not entitled to purchase the stock for himself and then resell it to plaintiff at a higher price, on the misrepresentation that the price so charged was the price paid.

5. APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—ARGUMENT.

Where the only argument made on appeal to support the alleged erroneous rulings on evidence was the statement that the rulings were erroneous and prejudicial, the Supreme Court will not prosecute an independent inquiry to discover reasons for or against the correctness of the rulings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

L. T. Hatfield and W. F. Cowan, for appellant. Copeland & Harris and A. A. De Linge, for respondent.

McLAUGHLIN, J. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,400 alleged to be due from appellant to respondent by reason of the fact that the former, while acting as the special agent of the latter for the purchase of certain corporate stock, purchased the same for $1,500 and demanded and received from his principal the sum of $2,900 in payment for said stock. The appellant in his answer denied that he acted as the agent of respondent in the transaction, but the court found against him on the issue thus presented, and this appeal is from the judgment thereupon entered against him.

The principal point urged by appellant as ground for reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that he acted as the agent of respondent in the purchase of the stock. It is a well-settled rule of appellate practice that, when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed. And it is equally well settled that such conflict exists whenever there is "such a substantial and material variance in the evidence adduced upon both sides of a litigated question of fact as will sustain the determination of the lower court, no matter which way it may find therefrom." Raymond v. Glover, 144 Cal. 552, 78 Pac. 3. A careful examination of the evidence in this record leaves no room for doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings assailed. The testimony of respondent certainly affords such support, and the trial court unquestionably had the right to give his evidence full credit, even if it had been flatly contradicted by the testimony of every other witness in the case. There was, however, no such contradiction. On the contrary, the evidence of appellant himself lends strong corroboration to the testimony of his adversary in many important particulars. Both agree that the appellant at the outset was authorized by respondent to purchase the stock for $1,500. Although he agreed to make an effort to purchase the stock for that sum, he did not communicate this offer to the owner of the stock, but later informed the respondent that it could not be purchased for less than $2,900. The latter thereupon authorized appellant to purchase the stock for that price, saying he would pay $50 down and the balance within 60 days. According to the testimony of appellant and the owner of the stock this offer was communicated to the latter, who says, that he then remarked that he was "not in the time business." Nothing further was said at that time, but about 10 o'clock that same morning the appellant and the owner reached an agreement whereby the former purchased the stock for $1,500, paying $100 down and the balance within 15 days thereafter. Immediately after this agreement had been reached, the appellant wrote respondent that he had purchased and was the owner of the stock, which he offered to respondent for the exact sum the latter had authorized him to pay when informed that it could not be purchased for less. The terms of payment the amounts being excepted, were identical with the terms secured from the owner by appellant, as a sequence flowing from the negotiations opened in respondent's behalf. This fact is significant when considered in connection with the peculiar circumstance that the offer accepted by appellant was not only far more advantageous than the offer that morning made by him as respondent's agent, but was for the identical amount named in the preliminary authorization when, in response to appellant's suggestion, respondent authorized him to purchase the stock for $1,500.

These pertinent and suggestive facts have an important bearing on the question presented for solution when viewed in the light of the conduct of the parties from the outset. When appellant suggested that respondent could purchase the stock for $1,500, the latter at once authorized appellant to purchase it for him at that price. When informed by appellant that the stock could not be purchased for the sum first mentioned, the respondent authorized the payment of the sum then named by the former as the price demanded by the owner. From this it is clearly apparent that the appellant assumed to act for respondent in negotiating for the purchase of this stock for the least sum possible, and that the latter acted upon the representations made to him as to what that sum was. The law regards form less than substance, and it would be sacrificing substance for shadow to say that, under these circumstances, the appellant could purchase the stock for the identical sum mentioned in the preliminary authorization, and, by merely repudiating his agency, exact from his principal the larger sum named by him as the minimum price for which the stock could be obtained. He had been expressly authorized by respondent to pay the sum of $1,500 for this stock, and, having voluntarily undertaken to represent the respondent in negotiations for the purchase of the same, he could not buy it in for that sum, and then take advantage of his own representations and conduct to his own profit and the detriment of his principal. His relations to respondent, thereby created, could not be changed by the letter written after the purchase had been consummated. If, under the law, the relation of principal and agent existed, such relation could not be changed, modified or terminated by his mere declaration that he had purchased and was the owner of the stock. If, in that letter he had made a full and complete disclosure of all the material facts, including the price he had paid for the stock, and respondent, with full knowledge, thus imparted, had proceeded to purchase the stock for the price demanded, the latter would not be entitled to recover the surplus because, in that event, his acquiescence would entail a waiver of his rights as a principal, and be equivalent to an admission that appellant had purchased the stock in his individual, instead of his representative, capacity. But no such disclosure was made. On the contrary, the amount paid for the stock was carefully concealed, and any man in respondent's situation, reading the letter in the light of what had transpired, would naturally believe that the writer had purchased the stock pursuant to the agreement and for the sum named in the latest authorization which was identical with the amount demanded in the letter. Moreover, any effect certain declarations in this letter might have as evidence bearing on the existence of the agency is neutralized by other statements therein, and by the conduct of appellant thereafter. In that very letter he states terms calculated to lull supicion and at the same time take advantage of respondent's desire to purchase the stock and his expressed willingness to pay the designated price. He knew what price to fix, because the respondent had accepted and acted upon his report following the first authorization to purchase the stock. The terms stated in the letter would, if accepted, enable him to reap the far-famed Teuton's 1 per cent. by merely paying the owner money received from the respondent. He was apparently willing to use the knowledge obtained under the guise of agency to his own advantage that he might secure profits, which, in our opinion, the law will not permit him to retain. No amount of adroitness in framing the letter could countervail the concealment of material facts which it was his duty to disclose. Then, too, his conduct when confronted with respondent's demand that the new stock certificates be issued to him amounted to an admission that he had acted as the latter's agent throughout the entire transaction. True, there is some conflict in the evidence as to what transpired at that time, but actions frequently speak louder than words, and his equivocal response to this demand when natural impulses would impel him to speak frankly and pointedly, gives peculiar potency to the undisputed fact that the stock certificates were issued to respondent and not to him.

It is contended in appellant's behalf that because the service was voluntary and gratuitous, no duty or obligation to respondent rested upon him. With this contention we cannot agree. Appellant having undertaken this agency was bound to exercise good faith, and at least slight care and diligence, in executing what he had voluntarily undertaken to do. Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 434; Samonset v. Mesnager, 108 Cal. 358, 41 Pac. 337; Civ. Code, § 1975. While he coud not be compelled to enter upon the performance of the service, nor be mulcted in damages for his failure to do so, when he did enter upon such performance he was, in common with all other agents, bound to exercise the utmost good faith in dealing with his principal. An agent for hire is bound to exercise a greater degree of care and diligence than an agent acting gratuitously, but the latter has no greater license to indulge in misrepresentations, concealment, or other breaches of good faith than the former. It is a maxim of jurisprudence that no person will be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong, and this general rule is subject to no exception favoring those who voluntarily and gratuitously undertake the performance of service for another. No man can be compelled to don the yoke of special, unremunerated duty to another, but when that yoke is voluntarily assumed, the wearer will not be permitted to lay down his burden when profit to himself furnishes an inducement, and that profit results from detriment suffered by the other party. The primary object of human law is to curb human selfishness manifested in the various forms of passion, and the numerous guises avarice and greed may assume. Its most wholesome rules frown upon deceit, chicanery, bad faith, and other forms of fraud, actual and constructive, and are designed to compel the exercise of good faith, candor, honesty, and fairness in dealings between men. It would be a reproach to a system having these objects in view to say that the rules referred to do not apply to one who has officiously and voluntarily undertaken and entered upon the performance of gratuitous service for another. The law governing the confidential relation of principal and agent is subject to no such reproach, for, as has been well said, "the main difference between an agency by contract and a gratuitous agency lies in the fact that the former may be enforced while it remains unacted upon by either party, while the latter can be enforced only when it has been acted upon by the agent, and he has, by his acts, involved the interests and rights of his principal." Huffcutt on Agency, § 29; Clark & Skyles on Agency, pp. 109, 964 et seq.; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 1, pp. 1060, 1070, 1071, 1072; Pomeroy on Eq. Jur. § 959; Civ. Code, § 3517. While our Code only requires slight care and diligence in ordinary cases of gratuitous agency, it in no way modifies the rule above announced touching the exercise of good faith. Civ. Code, § 1975. In fact, it lays down a rule far more burdensome in cases where the agent is intrusted with the performance at his own request, and we are by no means certain that appellant's conduct at the inception of the agency here disclosed did not bring him within this rule. Civ. Code, §§ 1975, 1976.

Our attention has been invited to certain rulings of the trial court in the admission and exclusion of offered evidence, but the only argument vouchsafed is the curt statement that these rulings were erroneous and prejudicial. The Supreme Court long since announced that under such circumstances it did not feel "called upon to prosecute an independent inquiry in order to find out reasons for or against the correctness of the rulings," and this court has repeatedly signified its intention to follow the rule thus announced. People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 297, 52 Pac. 833; Humphrey v. Pope, (Cal. App.) 82 Pac. 223. We would be justified, therefore, in ignoring the assignments of error, but have elected to examine them with the result that no error prejudicial to appellant was discovered.

McCLELLAN et al. v. WEAVER et al.

(Civ. 232.)

1. Wills—Construction of Will—Review.

Under Civ. Code, § 1318, declaring that the intention of a testator must be ascertained from the words of his will taking into view the circumstances under which it was made, the appellate court in a suit for the construction of a will must, where the record is silent as to extraneous circumstances, interpret the will unaided by any extraneous circumstances.

2. Same—Construction Against Intestacy.

A construction of a will favorable to testacy obtains where the language used reasonably admits of such construction.

3. Same—Invalidity of Will.

Where a will, notwithstanding the invalidity of a trust attempted to be created, disposed of the property to devisees in such a manner as to require the same to be upheld, the next of kin of the testator could not urge the invalidity of the trust as a ground for adjudging that the testator died intestate, so as to enable them to take the property as intestate property.

4. Same—Construction—Estates Acquired.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to a devisee in trust "for herself and her son * * * and her daughters," and on her death to the son and daughters equally, the devisee to hold the residue for life, and provided that the devisee should have the residue distributed to her on final distribution to hold for life, and that her son and daughters should have the remainder distributed to them subject to the life estate in the devisee. Held, that the testator gave to the devisee a beneficial interest for life in the residue, and on the trust failing because of indefiniteness the residue passed to her discharged of all burdens, save such interest as passed to her children as remaindermen.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

Action by Sarah Ann McClellan and others against Agnes Weaver and others for the construction of the will of J. D. Byers, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

N. J. Barry, H. D. Burroughs, and R. R. Seyer, for appellants. Garroutte & Goodwin and J. E. Pardee, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action was commenced under the provisions of section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiffs' purpose being to have the court ascertain and declare the rights of all persons in and to the estate of one J. D. Byers, deceased, who died testate, and to obtain from the court a judgment that plaintiffs are entitled to have distributed to them all the residue of said estate after the payment of the debts thereof, the expenses of administration and the specific legacies mentioned in the will of the said Byers. The defendants are nephews and nieces, the next of kin of deceased. They deny testacy, and allege that the provisions of said will, under which plaintiffs claim, are illegal and void, and that defendants, as heirs at law and next of kin of deceased, are entitled to distribution. Deceased died March 23, 1902, at Lassen county, where said estate is situated. J. A. Forkner was duly appointed executor of the will in question. No final account has been filed and no portion of the estate has been distributed. There were several specific bequests to some of the defendants and others which the decree recognizes, and as to which no question arises. The controversy springs from the following paragraph of the will: "Twelfth: I give and devise all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate both real and personal and wheresoever situated to Sarah Ann McClellan in trust during her life for herself, her son James H. B. McClellan and her daughters Ella Forkner and Ida Andrews, and upon the death of said Sarah Ann McClellan all of said rest, residue and remainder to go to said James H. B. McClellan, Ella Forkner and Ida Andrews, to be divided amongst them equally share and share alike." The will gave the executor power to carry on the business of deceased pending administration the same as it was conducted and carried on during his lifetime, and requested the probate court to give the "executor such time as was reasonably necessary" to pay the specific legacies out of the personal estate and the profits of the said business. It was also provided by the thirteenth paragraph as follows: "And it is my will that pending the administration of my estate my said executor pay to said Sarah Ann McClellan such sum monthly as in the judgment of said executor is necessary for her support and the conditions of my estate will permit." The fourteenth paragraph is as follows: "Any legatee herein named contesting this will shall forfeit all rights hereunder and the bequest made to him or her shall pass to my residuary legatees." After making disposition of the specific bequests in accordance with the will, the court found: "Seventh: That Sarah Ann McClellan is entitled to all the rest, residue, and remainder of said estate both real and personal, and wheresoever situate, to have, hold, and enjoy the same during the term of her natural life, and upon her death all of said rest, residue, and remainder of said estate to go to said James H. B. McClellan, Ella Forkner, and Ida Andrews, to be divided amongst them equally share and share alike; and that the said Sarah Ann McClellan is entitled to have all the rest, residue, and remainder of said estate distributed to her upon final distribution, to have, hold, and enjoy the same during the term of her natural life; and the said James H. B. McClellan, Ella Forkner, and Ida Andrews have the right to have all of said rest, residue, and remainder distributed to them subject to the life estate in the same distributed to said Sarah Ann McClellan." Judgment was entered accordingly. Defendants appeal from that portion of the judgment disposing of the residue of said estate, on the judgment roll alone.

Defendants contend that the trust attempted to be created by the will is void for uncertainty, and that it is not for any one of the purposes allowed by section 857 of the Civil Code, and that defendants are, therefore, entitled to distribution of the residue of said estate as heirs at law of deceased. The Civil Code prescribes certain rules for the construction of wills. The will is to be construed according to the intention of the testator, and, where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible. Section 1317. "The testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made, exclusive of his oral declaration." Id. § 1318. Respondents state in their brief some facts and circumstances in aid of the construction of the will as claimed by them. But the record is silent as to these alleged facts and circumstances. We do not even know from the record what relation by consanguinity or otherwise the residuary legatees bore to the testator or to any of the other legatees. The will must, therefore, be its own interpreter unaided by any extraneous circumstances. It is a cardinal rule that a liberal construction should be given to testamentary dispositions of property (In re Heywood's Estate [Cal. Sup.] 82 Pac. 755); and it is a fundamental principle that a construction of a will favorable to testacy will always obtain when the language used reasonably admits of such construction (Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 Pac. 315).

It does not concern defendants whether the trial court correctly determined the relative rights of plaintiffs to the residue if they are entitled thereto. It is immaterial so far as concerns defendants whether or not a valid trust was created if, notwithstanding its invalidity, there was such disposition of the property made to plaintiffs as should be upheld under settled principles of testamentary construction. It may be conceded that, while the testator had in mind making Mrs. McClellan a trustee of the residue of the estate for some purposes, he failed to define the objects or purposes of the trust with certainty and definiteness, and so failed to create a valid trust. But, notwithstanding his failure in this respect, he did not fail to make perfectly clear his intention that the residue should go to Mrs. McClellan and her children. "Where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible." Civ. Code, § 1317. Mr. Perry states the rule as follows: "If the declaration of trust is too imperfect to establish that purpose, and yet plainly shows that the intention was that the donee should not take beneficially, and that the sole purpose of the gift or grant was to carry out the purpose of the trust, which failed, the donee will take in trust for the donor or his heirs, but, if it appear, from the whole instrument, that some beneficial interest was intended for the donee, or that he was intended to take beneficially in case the particular purpose fails, no trust will result, but he will take the estate discharged of burdens." Perry on Trusts, § 159. See, also, the principle stated to same effect, Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 15, p. 1131. It seems to us entirely clear that the testator devised the residue of his property to Mrs. McClellan with the intention that she should enjoy it, at least to some extent, during her life, and that at her death the said residue should go to her children in equal shares. Whether these children could claim a portion of the incomes during the life of their mother is a question not involved and is not decided. As already said, this question does not concern defendants, and these children are not appealing.

The main intention of the testator obviously was the creation of a beneficial interest in the residue of his estate in Mrs. McClellan during her life, with the remainder over to her children. We can but conjecture his entire purpose in seeking to make the devise in trust. His principal object in that regard may have been to forbid the disposition of the corpus of the property by Mrs. McClellan. But whatever this purpose, he clearly devised to her a beneficial interest "during her life," and, the trust failing, that interest passed to her, as Mr. Perry expresses it, "discharged of all burdens," save such interest as passed also to her children as remaindermen.

This seems to us so clearly shown by an examination of all the provisions of the will that we see no necessity for further citation of authorities or for going into any extended analysis of the will.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Railroads — Accidents at Crossings — Contributory Negligence—Question for Jury.

Whether plaintiff, who was injured by a train while driving over a railroad crossing, was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look down the track for a train as he approached the crossing, held under the evidence to be a question for the jury.

2. Same.

Where a person who was injured by a train while driving over a railroad crossing can at a convenient point near the track discover the approach of the train by the exercise of his senses of hearing and sight, and thereby avoid the danger in which he has placed himself, his failure to do so is contributory negligence, precluding recovery, notwithstanding the employés operating the train may have been negligent in failing to give the statutory signals or warnings of its approach at the crossing.

A statement, entitled a statement on motion for a new trial, which was also a bill of exceptions and regularly settled and allowed as such, was sufficient to authorize the granting of a new trial, since both statement of facts and bill of exceptions may be incorporated in the same paper.

4. Appeal — Decisions Reviewable — Nonsuit—Specification of Errors.

The granting of a nonsuit may be reviewed on appeal as error of law, if excepted to and specified as such.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3316–3330; vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1582–1595.]

5. New Trial—Motions for Notice of Intention—Specification of Errors—Sufficiency.

In a notice of intention to move for a new trial embodied in a bill of exceptions, a specification of error that the motion would be made on account of errors in law occurring in the trial and excepted to by plaintiffs was sufficient.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

A. A. Moore, for appellant. W. W. Foote and Vogelsang & Brown, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs, the wife and minor children of Joseph Martin, to recover damages for his death, claimed to have been caused by the negligence of defendant in the operation of its railroad. This appeal is taken by the defendant from the order granting plaintiffs a new trial after a judgment of nonsuit had been entered against them upon the trial of the action in the court below.

The accident resulting in the death of Martin occurred at a crossing next to the town of Irvington, in Alameda county, on September 6, 1894. The railroad track at this point runs north and south and is intersected by a road known as the "Mission Road," running east and west. The Mission Road is 66 feet wide. The right of way of the defendant is 60 feet wide; the main line of track being located in the middle of it, and the rails being a fraction over 27 feet from the east and west lines of the right of way. On the corner formed by the intersection of the easterly line of the right of way and the northerly line of the Mission Road is located what is known as "Vollmer's Warehouse," which extends about 100 feet northerly along the right of way, and easterly about 150 feet on the Mission Road. Further north of Vollmers, and also on the edge of the right of way, is located another warehouse. In front of these warehouses, and between them and the main-line track, was a switch or siding which extended some 500 feet north of the crossing. The platforms of said warehouses, which were 4½ feet in height, extended westerly so as to reach the floors of box cars stationed on the switch; the platform to the north being much wider than the Vollmer platform in order to meet the curve of the switch as it joined the main track. The distance from the corner of Vollmer's warehouse to the nearest rail of this side track was 29 feet 4 inches, and from the center of the near rail of said side track to the nearest rail of the main track the distance was 12 feet 11 inches. At the time of the accident there were several freight box cars of defendant—the evidence is uncertain as to the number—standing on said siding; one of these extending some distance into the Mission Road. These box cars were from 34 to 40 feet long, extended 2 feet beyond the rails of the side track, and stood next the platform in front of Vollmer's warehouse.

The deceased was a farmer and teamster, a man of good hearing and eyesight, who had been accustomed for several years to drive teams on the road over this crossing where he was fatally injured. On the afternoon of the day of the accident he was driving a team of heavy horses harnessed to an empty open-geared lumber wagon, and was sitting astride on the reach near the center, at least 11 feet from the front end of the wagon pole. The reach of the wagon stood 2½ feet from the ground, and the deceased was a man about 5 feet 9 inches in height. He had driven from the town of Mission San Jose downgrade toward Irvington and this railroad crossing westerly on the Mission Road at a slow trot. When some 250 feet from defendant's right of way, the evidence shows that his view of defendant's track was practically obscured by trees and buildings, including the warehouses mentioned above. As deceased came down about the corner or close to the corner of Vollmer's warehouse on the defendant's right of way (the exact spot seems to have been indicated by a witness on some diagram used on the trial, which diagram is not in the record), he stopped his team and sat in the attitude of one listening. How long he so remained does not appear. It does appear, however, that, though he stopped to listen, he did not look or attempt to look either at this point or at any other time after he started toward the crossing, although there was evidence that through the space between the warehouse and the box cars on the switch, something over 7 feet, an observation might be had by a person standing in the Mission Road along defendant's track for some 2,000 feet northerly in the direction of Niles. After stopping to listen, deceased started his team into a walk towards the crossing, going very slowly up a raise in the road approaching it. As he cleared the box car, which was extending into the Mission Road on the siding, he looked down the track, discovered the train, immediately whipped up his team which was on the main track at the time, and endeavored to clear it. The train, however, struck the hind wheel of the wagon, threw him from it, and in the fall he sustained injuries which caused his death. The train which collided with the wagon of deceased was a special freight train, and there was evidence in the case tending to show that no bell or whistle or other signal was given of the approach of the train towards the crossing, and that it approached it on a descending grade at the rate of from 35 to 40 miles an hour.

With this statement of the general features of the evidence, we approach the merits of the appeal, calling attention to other items of evidence as we proceed. The only question in the case is whether, upon the evidence, the court was warranted in holding, as a matter of law, that the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence in approaching the crossing. While originally so holding, upon the motion for a nonsuit, the trial court was satisfied upon a more particular consideration of the evidence, upon the motion for a new trial, that the question of deceased's contributory negligence was properly for the jury, and we think this conclusion was correct. In granting the nonsuit, as it appears from the grounds of defendant's motion therefor, the court was of the opinion that the evidence showed that while defendant, when near the crossing, listened for an approaching train, he was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look northerly along the track when he reached the corner of Vollmer's warehouse on defendant's right of way, from which point, as we have said, there was evidence that the track could have been seen for 2,000 feet. And the court must have assumed in this connection that the testimony showed that, had the deceased so looked at this point, he would have discovered the approaching train.

There can be no question but the law is well settled in this state that a traveler upon a highway approaching a crossing must take all reasonable precautions to ascertain whether a train is approaching. In this regard the imperative duty is cast upon him to listen carefully and to look carefully at the most available and convenient distance from the track from which an observation of it can be made, and, when the act of listening and looking may be reasonably effective, that, notwithstanding the employés operating a train may be guilty of negligence in failing to give the statutory signals or warnings of its approach to a crossing, still, if at a convenient point near the track a traveler could have discovered the approach of the train by the exercise of his senses of hearing and sight, and hence avoided the danger in which he placed himself, his failure to do so will constitute contributory negligence precluding a recovery from those who are equally negligent with himself. Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Green v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 Pac. 926; Green v. Los Angeles Term. Ry. Co., 143 Cal. 31, 76 Pac. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68. But it will be observed that, as far as the duty of the traveler upon the highway to look is concerned, contributory negligence on his part in failing to do so can only result from the fact that, if he looked from a point of observation near the crossing he could have seen the train approaching and have avoided it. It is only when, if he had made the observation, he could have seen the coming of the train, that he can be said to have been negligent in omitting to do so.

The trial court in granting the nonsuit necessarily assumed that the evidence showed that when deceased reached the corner of the warehouse the train was approaching along the 2,000 feet of track open to observation from that point, and that had he looked he would have seen it; but we think, as the lower court doubtless did on the motion for a new trial, in its review of the evidence, that whether the train at the time when deceased could have looked had reached a point where he could have seen it, had he done so, was, under the evidence, a question for the jury. The witness, Christensen, who made the observation as to the distance one could see up the track from the warehouse corner, testified: "That a man on the siding, or on the main track, or anywhere between or at the corner of the warehouse, can see a man afoot on the track coming towards Niles for a distance of at least 2,000 feet. He can see him until he gets over the little hill that runs down towards Mallard, where the grade would be higher than his head." The evidence of this witness simply fixed the fact that a view of the track from the warehouse corner might be had for the distance stated, but whether the train was anywhere within the field of observation of deceased had he looked from that point was a matter to which other evidence in the case was addressed. Ainsworth, one of the witnesses for the plaintiff and proprietor of a hotel near the crossing, was watching for the coming of the train. as a guest at his hotel wished to take it if it stopped. He testified that a train would ordinarily be in view a quarter of a mile below the switch (the switch was 500 feet long), where the track declines and runs down into Niles (doubtless the point called Mallard referred to in Christensen's testimony); that he saw deceased stop his team at the corner of the warehouse and listen; that the witness looked down the track at the same time to see if he could see a train or hear it coming, but did not see anything. The deceased started towards the crossing, walking his horses very slowly, and that his team was in the middle of the track when deceased looked, discovered the train, and then whipped the horses up in an effort to clear it. Another witness, Mrs. Brownell, who was in an upper story of the same hotel of which her husband with Ainsworth was proprietor, was watching for the train, as she did daily, because her little child was always anxious to see it pass. She saw the accident, and testified that she looked down the track and saw the train coming; that it was then half a mile away, and deceased was leisurely approaching the track, and his team was then about 10 feet from it; that this was the first she saw of him. She had not seen him stop to listen. Under this evidence, considered with all the other evidence in the case, it was for the jury to determine, as affecting the question of contributory negligence, whether, had the deceased looked down the track when he approached the corner of the warehouse, he could have seen the train then approaching. If the testimony of these witnesses was uncontradicted, and the jury was satisfied with the accuracy of their observations and their capacity to determine distances, it would warrant them in finding that at the time deceased reached the point when he could have looked the train was not in sight. According to Ainsworth, it was not observable at Mallard, a point 2,000 feet down the track from which it could be seen, and, according to the testimony of Mrs. Brownell, who was looking from an elevation, it was half a mile away. The testimony of these witnesses may be open to the criticism counsel for appellant subjects it to, but their credibility and the weight to be attached to their testimony were matters for the consideration of the jury. It is insisted by counsel that the truth of the testimony of these witnesses is mathematically impossible, as the train could not have covered the distance of 2,000 feet while the deceased was proceeding 27 feet from the corner to the nearest rail of the main track, or at most 30 feet to its center. But, if the testimony that the train was going 35 or 40 miles an hour was true, the train could have covered the distance of 2,000 feet in less time than a minute, while it would not be unreasonable for the jury to conclude that it would take more than that time for the deceased to proceed from the warehouse corner to the point of collision. In any event, whether he could or could not was a fact to be determined by the jury. We think, in view of the testimony referred to, that the case upon the question of the deceased's contributory negligence should have been originally allowed by the court to go to the jury, and, in subsequently reaching that conclusion by granting the motion of plaintiffs for a new trial, we do not think the lower court committed any error.

There is no merit in the point made by appellant that the lower court erred in granting the motion for a new trial because the motion was presented on a statement of the case and contained no specification of particulars in which the evidence was alleged to be insufficient to justify the decision of the court in granting a nonsuit, or any assignment of error. The statement, while entitled a statement on motion for a new trial, was also a bill of exceptions, and was regularly settled and allowed as such. Both the statement and the bill of exceptions may be incorporated in the same paper. Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 6 Pac. 381. The ruling granting the nonsuit and the exception of defendant to it appeared in the substantive part of the case. If excepted to, and specified as such, the granting of a nonsuit may be reviewed on appeal as error of law. Gerlach v. Turner, 89 Cal. 446, 26 Pac. 870; Malone v. Beardsley, 92 Cal. 150, 28 Pac. 218. In the notice of intention to move for a new trial embodied in their bill of exceptions, it was specified, among other grounds of the motion, that it would be made on account of errors in law occurring in the trial and excepted to by plaintiffs. This was all the specification of error that was necessary. Where a party proceeds upon a bill of exceptions, the specification of the particular errors upon which he relies is not necessary. It was said, in Shadburne v. Daly, 76 Cal. 355, 18 Pac. 403, and since followed (except in the case of Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 25 Pac. 487, subsequently overruled in Barfield v. S. S. Ir. Co., 111 Cal. 119, 43 Pac. 406), that: "No specification of the particular errors of law on which the appellant will rely is made in her bill. But while this is required in a statement of the case (Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 3) it is not in a bill of exceptions. Code Civ. Proc. § 650. The point of respondent, therefore, is not tenable." See, also, Hagman v. Williams, 88 Cal. 146, 25 Pac. 1111; Barfield v. S. S. Ir. Co., 111 Cal. 119, 43 Pac. 406; Smith v. Smith, 119 Cal. 183, 48 Pac. 730, 51 Pac. 183; Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 Pac. 84.

The order appealed from, granting the new trial, is therefore affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SHIPPING CO. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(S. F. 3,783.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1907.)

TAXATION—VESSELS—RESIDENCE OF OWNER.

Vessels engaged in foreign or interstate commerce, which had not by the manner of their use acquired an actual situs elsewhere, were properly assessed for taxation at the domicile or residence of their sole owner at the place where they were actually registered under the laws of the United States.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 436.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the California Shipping Company against the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. E. Taylor (Wm. P. Hubbard, of counsel), for appellant. Franklin K. Lane, City Atty., Percy V. Long, City Atty., and W. I. Brobeck, Asst. City Atty., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to recover taxes paid by plaintiff under protest, which had been assessed and levied by defendant for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, upon 17 vessels owned by plaintiff. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff having failed to amend, judgment was given for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from such judgment.

The complaint shows that the plaintiff is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of this state, and was on the 1st Monday of March, 1902, and ever since has been, the sole owner of all of said vessels. All of said vessels were registered, under the laws of the United States, at the port of San Francisco in this state. The allegation as to each of said vessels, relied upon to show that the same was not assessable in this state, is one to the effect that the vessel was not at 12 o'clock m. on the 1st Monday in March, 1902, or thereafter and prior to the filing of the complaint herein (December 18, 1902), actually within the waters of the state of California, but was at all said times without the waters of such state. As to some of said vessels, it was alleged that the same had never been actually within the waters of this state, while as to others the allegation was that they had not been within the waters since a date preceding said 1st Monday of March, 1902. As to none of said vessels were facts alleged showing that the same had acquired an actual situs outside of the state of California, or that it was not engaged solely in foreign or interstate commerce. Nor was there any allegation to the effect that the city and county of San Francisco was not the domicile or place of residence of the sole owner of all of these vessels. The complaint, then, presented the simple case of vessels which had not by the manner of their use acquired an actual situs elsewhere, but which were employed in foreign or interstate commerce, and assessed at the domicile or residence of their sole owner, at which place they were actually registered under the laws of the United States. That such assessment was proper is fully established by the authorities. See Olson v. City and County of San Francisco (Cal. Sup.) 82 Pac. 850, and cases therein cited. See, also, Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Kentucky, 26 Sup. Ct. 679, 50 L. Ed. 1082, and cases there cited.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1907.)

TRADE-MARKS — UNFAIR COMPETITION — INJUNCTION.

Without regard to whether plaintiffs have, or can have, a trade-mark in the words "Old Homestead," stamped on bread manufactured by them, the stamping into bread manufactured by defendant of the words "New Homestead," in letters and words of the same size, style, and arrangement, being for the purpose, and with the result of, appropriating plaintiffs' trade, will be enjoined, on the ground of fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trade-Marks and Trade-Names, §§ 78–86.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs were engaged in the business of baking and selling bread in the city of San Francisco. Their bakery had become known as the "Old Homestead Bakery," and they had been for a long time making and selling a certain kind of bread which they had designated as "Old Homestead Bread," which had become well known by that name, and had acquired a reputation for its good quality, and by reason thereof it had an extensive sale in the city and county of San Francisco. The name "Old Homestead" was stamped upon each loaf of bread, the word "Old" being placed immediately over the word "Homestead." Because of its reputation under the designation aforesaid, the plaintiffs had enjoyed a good trade in this bread, and it had been a source of great profit to them. The defendant, with the intent to injure and destroy the business of the plaintiffs and to deceive the public and the buyers and consumers of plaintiffs' "Old Homestead" bread and to injure and defraud the plaintiffs, prepared and offered for sale an article of bread in loaves of a size similar to those of the plaintiffs, marked with the words "New Homestead" stamped into the loaves, with letters and words of the same style and size, and arranged in the same manner as the words "Old Homestead," in the loaves of bread made by the plaintiffs. This bread was put upon the market by the defendant, and was of a character to deceive the buyers of bread, and did mislead the previous purchasers and consumers of bread of plaintiffs' manufacture, and induced them to buy that of the defendant's instead of the plaintiffs', whereby the plaintiffs lost their trade, and were damaged in an amount which the court below found to be $765. This action was begun to enjoin the defendant from making bread in imitation of the plaintiffs' bread, and marking the same with the name "New Homestead," or "Homestead," or in any manner using the said words in connection with the sale of said bread to induce customers to buy the same, or from using any simulation of the plaintiffs' trade-mark aforesaid. The cause was tried by the court, findings were made in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and judgment rendered accordingly. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

The contention of the defendant is that the words "Old Homestead" are merely descriptive of the kind and quality of the bread; that they are an affirmation that the bread "is like that made in the old homestead of childhood's recollection," and that it is equally pure and simple as home-made bread; that they do not indicate origin or ownership; and hence, that any person is at liberty to use them, and that they cannot be adopted as a trade-mark and the right to their use acquired as the property of any person. The words "Old Homestead," or "Homestead," may, and perhaps do, suggest that the bread on which they appear is asserted to be similar to that made in the ordinary old homestead. Whether this would indicate to any person that it is good bread or bad bread, would depend on the recollections or knowledge of the particular person concerning the kind of bread made in the homestead of his experience, whether it was that of his childhood or of his adult years. But we may concede that the words are descriptive in character and relate to quality, and hence that, under section 991 of the Civil Code, they cannot be appropriated by any person as his own, so as to give him a right to prevent their use by another to his injury, regardless of the motives or purposes of the other in so using it. The case of the plaintiffs does not depend on its right to the exclusive use of the words in question. It is based on fraud. It rests on the right of the plaintiffs to restrain the conduct of the defendant whereby he, in order to injure the plaintiff and benefit himself, simulates the plaintiffs' goods, deceives the plaintiffs' patrons into the belief that his bread is that made by the plaintiffs and thereby induces them to buy his own bread instead of the plaintiffs', thus, by fraud and deception, depriving the plaintiffs of the profits of such sales and appropriating the same to his own use. The right to prevent such an injury by injunction does not depend on the ownership by the plaintiffs of any particular word, phrase, or device, as a trade-mark. If the words in question constituted a trade-mark of the plaintiffs, as defined by law, and the defendant was using it to plaintiffs' injury, he would be restrained, although he were in entire ignorance of plaintiffs' prior use, or right, and were using it in good faith, with good motives, with no intent to injure any person, and no consciousness of such injury. But where one purposely imitates the goods, signs, or place of business of another, in order, by deceiving the other's patrons, to sell his own goods as the goods of the other, and thereby obtain for himself the profits which would otherwise go to the other, it is not necessary that the devices, words, or signs which are imitated shall constitute a trade-mark. The right of action in such a case arises from the fraudulent purpose and conduct of the defendant and the injury caused to the plaintiffs thereby, and it exists independently of the law regulating trade-marks, or of the ownership of such trade-mark by the plaintiffs. The gist of such an action is not the appropriation and use of another's trade-mark, but the fraudulent injury to, and appropriation of, another's trade.

This is well illustrated by the case of Weinstock, Lubin & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 42 Pac. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57. The plaintiff in that case was a corporation, and was engaged in business in a store upon which they had placed conspicuously the sign "Mechanical Store," which was probably more descriptive of character and quality than the words "Old Homestead" in the case at bar. It had constructed the building in which it conducted the business in a peculiarly conspicuous style of architecture, and in that building, and under that sign, it had, for a long time, conducted the business, had acquired a wide reputation, and by honest dealing had obtained an extensive and profitable custom and valuable good will. The defendant, for the fraudulent purpose of deceiving the public and the patrons of the plaintiff and appropriating to his own use the plaintiff's trade and profits, erected a building alongside that of plaintiff's, in the same style of architecture, so as to make it appear as a part of the plaintiff's store. He did not put up any sign whatever. In this adjoining building he kept for sale the same kind of goods as those dealt in by the plaintiff, and he did by these appearances deceive the public and prior patrons of the plaintiff, obtained their trade, and injured the plaintiff's business. It was held that this constituted an actionable wrong, regardless of the law of trade-marks, or the imitation or use of any words which the plaintiff might claim as a trade-mark, and that an injunction was properly granted to prevent its further continuance. The case of Dodge Stationery Company v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 Pac. 879, was of the same character, and was decided upon the same principle. The plaintiff's case is, in its legal aspect, in all respects similar. It was said in the Weinstock Case: "The fundamental principle underlying this entire branch of the law is, that no man has the right to sell his goods as the goods of a rival trader. * * * Upon what principle of law can a court of equity say, if you cheat and defraud your competitor in business by taking his name, the court will give relief against you, but if you cheat and defraud him by assuming a disguise of a different character, your acts are beyond the law? Equity will not concern itself about the means by which fraud is done. It is the results arising from the means, it is the fraud itself, with which it deals. The foregoing principles of law do not apply alone to the protection of parties having trade-marks and trade-names. They reach away beyond that, and apply to all cases where fraud is practiced by one in securing the trade of a rival dealer; and these ways are as many and as various as the ingenuity of the dishonest schemer can invent." The same reasons apply with equal force to the case at bar and demonstrate conclusively that the plaintiffs are entitled to their injunction without regard to their ownership of any name as a trade-mark, and without inquiry into the question raised by the defendant, whether or not the plaintiffs' name was properly registered as a trade-mark, or whether or not that registration was prior to the registration of the defendant.

In view of these conclusions is is unnecessary to notice further the other points raised.

MEYER v. O'ROURKE. (S. F. 3,786.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1907.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP OF LAND—FINDINGS—DECREE.

An allegation that plaintiff was the owner and in possession of land was an allegation of ownership in fee simple, and hence a finding that the allegation was true was sufficient to support a decree in plaintiff's favor on the theory of his ownership in fee.

2. COSTS—PERSONS INDIVIDUALLY LIABLE—EXECUTORS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1031, 1509, authorizing an award of costs against executors, etc., personally for mismanagement or bad faith in prosecuting or defending an action, it is not necessary that there be a finding of mismanagement or bad faith before costs may be awarded against them, since costs are but an incident of a judgment.

3. APPEAL—RIGHT OF REVIEW—EXECUTORS—JUDGMENT AGAINST INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY.

One sued as an executor and against whom judgment for costs was rendered personally was not entitled to review the judgment where he failed to make himself a party to the litigation individually.

4. COSTS—PERSONS INDIVIDUALLY LIABLE—EXECUTORS.

In the absence of a specific statute authorizing the imposition of costs against executors, etc., under Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, providing for the allowance of costs to plaintiff on judgment in his favor, costs will be imposed upon an executor individually, leaving him the right to seek reimbursement from the estate should he be fairly entitled to it.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

HENSHAW, J. This was an action to quiet title, brought against John F. O'Rourke as executor of the last will of Patrick O'Rourke, deceased. The complaint alleged "that plaintiff now is, and for some time hitherto has been, the owner and in possession of that certain piece of land," describing it. The answer was denial, with an allegation "that the real property in said complaint described is owned in fee simple by the said estate of Patrick O'Rourke, deceased." After trial the court found that "each and all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true and are sustained by the evidence." It is urged that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, in that there is a failure to find upon the affirmative allegation of the answer that the estate of Patrick O'Rourke owned the property in fee simple. A complaint, which alleges that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of certain lands, and that defendant claims an estate or interest therein, but has none, states a cause of action. Rough v. Simmons, 65 Cal. 227, 3 Pac. 804. The ownership and right of possession, as unqualifiedly averred in the complaint, is an allegation of ownership in fee. Civ. Code, §§ 680, 761, 762. The finding of the court, therefore, that all the allegations of the complaint are true, is sufficient to support the decree which was given in plaintiff's favor.

But the principal contention on this appeal is against the award of costs. The court awarded the costs against John F. O'Rourke personally. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure bearing upon this are sections 1031 and 1509. Upon authority of former decisions of this court, construing and applying those sections, viz., Hicox v. Graham, 6 Cal. 167, and Stevens v. S. F. & N. P. R. R. Co., 103 Cal. 252, 37 Pac. 146, the order the court here made was within its discretion. Most of the matters presented against this award were urged in Stevens v. Railroad Co., supra, and must be taken to have been decided adversely to the present contention. The Stevens Case, however, having been tried before a jury, differs in that respect from the case at bar, which was tried by the court, and it is urged that there should have been a finding of the mismanagement and bad faith of the executor before costs could have been awarded against him personally. Costs, however, are but an incident of the judgment, and no finding was necessary. Appellant's argument against the constitutionality of section 1509 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the familiar one that he is a defendant in his representative capacity as executor; that an award of the costs against him personally would be to deprive him of property without due process of law, in that he was not a party to the action; and that the section is unconstitutional in not conferring upon him process of law, and allowing him an opportunity to be heard in his individual capacity. The contention, however, so far as this case is concerned, proves too much. He appeals in his representative capacity, and upon his appeal seeks to have himself, in his individual capacity, relieved from this imposition of costs. Upon this appeal, therefore, as the executor of an estate, charged with its preservation and conservation, he occupies a position in hostility to it, in endeavoring to have the burden of the costs of litigation removed from his individual shoulders and cast upon the estate which he represents. So far as the estate is concerned, which alone he represents upon this appeal, the estate is not an aggrieved party. So far as he individually is concerned, if weight is to be accorded to his objections as to the constitutionality of the section, he should have connected himself with the proceedings in the trial court after the imposition of costs upon him individually, and so, in his proper and undividual capacity as a party aggrieved, have come before this court for relief. It was perfectly proper for him in his individual capacity to have made appropriate motion in the court below, seeking relief, and connecting him with the litigation. McCarthy v. Speed, 94 N. W. 411.

Moreover, if the appellant's views as to the unconstitutionality of section 1509, Code of Civil Procedure, should be held valid, the same vice of want of notice inheres in section 1031, Code of Civil Procedure, with the result that we are left without a statute bearing upon the imposition of costs in case of the executor or administrator excepting the general provision of section 1022, Code of Civil Procedure. In such case the rule is well settled, and is, indeed, commended, that the costs should be imposed upon the executor individually, and not upon the estate, nor upon him in his representative capacity. There is left to him the right to seek an allowance from the estate in a proper case. If, however, the litigation has been unjust or ill advised, then, to prevent the dissipation of estates at the hands of careless executors, the executor individually will be compelled to bear the burden. Thus says the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Hardy v. Call, 16 Mass. 530: "If the judgment for costs could be legally recovered against the goods and estates of testators and intestates, all such estates might go for the payment of costs in frivolous suits. Judgment, therefore, in every case commenced by an executor or administrator in which defendant becomes entitled to costs, ought to be entered against such executor or administrator personally. After payment he may charge the amount in his account of administration to be allowed or not as it may appear to the judge of the probate court that the suit was discreet or otherwise." See, also, Lynch v. Webster, 17

LYNCH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, Department 2, et al. (S. F. 4,737.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1906.)

APPEAL—CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF PARTY—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Sickness of a party to an action, preventing his attendance on the court, does not ipso facto require the court to grant a continuance; but whether the circumstances shown make it proper so to do is within the court's discretion, and its determination will not be disturbed, unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion.

In Bank. Application for a writ of mandate by Edward Lynch against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, department 2, and another. Application denied.

Edward Lynch and Bertin A. Weyl, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The application for a writ denied. In denying the application it is proper to say that the sickness of a party to an action, preventing his attendance on the court, does not ipso facto require the court to grant an application for a continuance, made on his behalf. It is for the trial court in all cases, except where otherwise expressly provided by statute, to determine whether or not the circumstances shown upon an application for a continuance are such as to make it proper that a continuance should be granted, and its conclusion thereon will not be disturbed, unless there has been a plain abuse of discretion. We make this statement, in view of the fact that it is alleged in the petition that, in granting continuances heretofore made, the court said that it was of the opinion that it is not a matter of discretion with the court to refuse a continuance, where it is made to appear that the defendant is unable by reason of sickness to appear. There is no decision of this court which can be properly construed as denying the discretion of the trial court in such cases.

UNION COLLECTION CO. v. BUCKMAN. (S. F. 3,509.)

1. GAMING—NOTE FOR GAMBLING—CONSIDERATION.

The consideration for a note given solely to evidence an indebtedness for money lost at a gambling game in a gambling house was contra bonos mores and unlawful under the settled law of the state, and the payee could not recover thereon.

2. BILLS AND NOTES—NONNEGOTIABLE NOTES—ASSIGNMENT—ACTIONS ON—DEFENSES.

All the defenses available against the payee of a nonnegotiable note are available against his assignee, and hence a note founded on a gambling debt can only be enforced if negotiable in form and then only by an innocent purchaser before maturity for value.

3. SAME—NEGOTIABLE NOTES—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a negotiable note, when it is shown that the consideration for the note was illegal, a prima facie case of notice to the holder is made out and the burden of proving that he took without notice before maturity and for value is on him.

4. SAME—CONSIDERATION OF NOTE—COMPROMISE OF VOID CLAIM—KNOWLEDGE OF CLAIMANT.

Though a compromise of a doubtful claim asserted and maintained in good faith is a sufficient consideration for a new promise, whether the claim be in suit or not, even though it may be ultimately found that the claim could not have prevailed, still a compromise of the claim is not sufficient to constitute a consideration for a new promise even when in suit, where the claim is wholly without foundation and known by the claimant to be so, and hence a compromise of a claim on promissory notes given to evidence an indebtedness for money lost at gambling was not a sufficient consideration for new notes.

5. SAME—AFFIRMANCE OF ILLEGAL CONTRACT—EXECUTION OF NEW NOTES.

Under the rule that courts will not entertain any action in affirmance of an illegal contract, the action of the maker of notes evidencing a gambling debt in attempting to compromise a claim under such notes by the execution of new notes did not validate the transaction so as to justify a court in allowing a recovery on the new notes.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

J. S. Reid, for appellant. Wm. H. Chapman and E. G. Knapp, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was brought upon two certain instruments in writing, whereby defendant agreed to pay to one Reid, plaintiff's assignor, $410 and interest. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Defendant in his answer admitted the execution of the instruments, but alleged that they were given without any consideration whatever, and solely for the purpose of evidencing an alleged indebtedness for money lost to one McMahon at a gambling game, for which alleged indebtedness he had given notes to McMahon, which had been transferred to Reid, and in part renewal of which he had executed the instruments in suit. He further alleged that Reid took and held the McMahon notes with full notice of the circumstances under which they were given, and that plaintiff here had the same notice.

Upon the trial, in support of this defense and in response to the prima facie case made by plaintiff, the following facts were shown over the objection and exception of plaintiff: Defendant, at a gambling house in San Francisco and in a gambling game participated in by McMahon, who was a winner therein, lost some $1,300, for which amount he then and there, at McMahon's request, gave to McMahon three promissory notes, which notes were nonnegotiable by reason of the presence in each of a stipulation for attorney fees in the event of suit. The evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that the original alleged indebtedness to McMahon was for money lost by defendant at this game and won by McMahon. There was no attempt whatever on the part of plaintiff to rebut the evidence of defendant upon this proposition. These notes were transferred to Reid for collection. Reid testified that he did not represent McMahon, but some other undisclosed person who was the equitable owner of the notes, but this we regard as immaterial. Reid subsequently brought suit upon one of these notes for $500. While this action was pending and ready for trial, defendant claiming that the note therein in suit and the other two notes were given solely to settle a gambling debt, an agreement was entered into between defendant and Reid, whereunder a dismissal of the suit was had and the three notes canceled in consideration of the giving of four notes for $200 each, and interest, by defendant to Reid. These notes were also nonnegotiable. Upon these notes, $100 only has been paid. Subsequently, Reid brought another action upon two of these notes, and this action being at issue, and ready for trial, and the defendant pleading therein want of consideration, in consideration of the dropping of the case from the calendar, and its indefinite continuance, and ultimate final dismissal in the event that defendant performed his part of the agreement, defendant executed the instruments in suit, which were also nonnegotiable in form, and paid the jury costs. He also, in writing, purported to waive all defenses he might have to the claim of plaintiff, and to ratify the notes he had given. The findings of the court were in accord with the allegations of the answer. The questions raised on this appeal are presented by exceptions to the rulings of the trial court in admitting evidence as to the validity of the original notes, and by attacks on certain findings of the court on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain them.

As already stated, the evidence sufficiently supports the conclusion of the trial court that the original notes were given to McMahon by defendant solely to evidence an alleged indebtedness for money lost by defendant to McMahon at a gambling game in a gambling house. At the outset, therefore, it may be stated that it is clear that, under the settled law of this state, the consideration for such notes was contra bonos mores and unlawful (Civ. Code, §§ 1607, 1667), and that McMahon could not have recovered thereon (Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 441; Gahan v. Neville, 2 Cal. 81; Carrier v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 328; Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 523, 70 Am. Dec. 746; Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615; Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110). It is also plain that any assignee of McMahon of said notes could occupy no better position in a suit on the same than McMahon himself. The notes being nonnegotiable, any defense available against McMahon would have been available against any assignee or person claiming under McMahon. Such a contract on the part of the loser to pay the amount of his losses at a gambling game could only be enforced if negotiable in form, and then only by an innocent purchaser before maturity for value. It is also well settled that, even in the case of negotiable paper, where an action is brought by a subsequent holder, when it is shown that the same was obtained from the maker by fraud or duress, or that the consideration therefor was illegal, a prima facie case of notice to such holder is made out, and the burden of proving that he took without notice before maturity and for value is thrown upon him. Fuller v. Hutchings, supra; Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 177, 23 Pac. 286; Jordan v. Grover, 99 Cal. 194, 33 Pac. 889; Shain v. Goodwin (C. C.) 46 Fed. 564. See, also, Perkins v. Prout, 47 N. H. 387, 93 Am. Dec. 449, and note. It was said in Graham v. Larimer, supra, quoting from Parsons on Notes and Bills, that the reason for this rule is that the presumption is that the original party who has obtained such an instrument and could not recover upon it will part with it for the purpose of enabling some third party to recover upon it for his benefit, and, quoting from Lord Campbell, that, when the defendant has proved fraud, or illegality in the original holder, he has raised a prima facie presumption that the plaintiff is agent for that holder. In the absence of such rebutting evidence, the finding must be that the plaintiff in such an action is not a holder without notice and for value.

From what has been said it is plain that, the illegal consideration being made to appear, a recovery on the original notes could not have been had in an action brought by McMahon, or Reid, or Reid's undisclosed equitable owner, or this plaintiff, and that any action thereon would have been without any legal foundation whatever. The same thing is necessarily true as to any notes given solely in renewal or in place of such original notes. Merely repeating a promise based on an illegal consideration cannot give it validity. Plaintiff, however, relies upon the contention that the compromises of the prior proceedings brought against defendant constituted a sufficient legal consideration for the instruments in suit, and barred all inquiry here as to the nature of the original transaction between defendant and McMahon. It cannot, of course, be successfully disputed that the compromise of a doubtful claim, asserted and maintained in good faith, constitutes a sufficient consideration for a new promise, even though it may ultimately be found that the claimant could not have prevailed. This is true whether the claim be in suit or not, but the rule is specially applicable where legal proceedings to enforce the asserted claim have been commenced and are pending and the proceedings are discontinued in pursuance of such compromise. See Spielberger v. Thompson, 131 Cal. 55, 63 Pac. 132, 678; McClure v. McClure, 100 Cal. 339, 34 Pac. 822; Rohrbacher v. Aitkin, 145 Cal. 485, 78 Pac. 1054. As to the effect of a compromise of a pending action, some general language of such nature has been used by some text-writers and courts as would, taken alone, warrant the contention of plaintiff that the compromise of the action in any case constitutes a sufficient consideration for a new promise and is a bar to all inquiry as to the merits of the original claim. See Beach on Modern Law of Contracts, § 177. Such, undoubtedly, should ordinarily be the effect of a compromise agreement made in good faith of a claim honestly asserted, for it is the policy of the law to discourage litigation and allow the parties to settle their bona fide disputes amicably. An examination of the authorities, however, discloses the fact that it has generally been recognized that, to make a compromise of a claim, even though the same be in suit, sufficient to constitute a consideration for a new promise, the claim must not be wholly without foundation, and known to the claimant to be so. See 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 714; 8 Cyc. 503, 505, 507, 509; 9 Cyc. 346; Beach on Modern Law of Contracts, § 176; Emery v. Royal, 117 Ind. 299, 20 N. E. 150; Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 615, 2 Am. Rep. 218; Creutz v. Heil, 89 Ky. 429, 12 S. W. 926; Everingham v. Meighan, 55 Wis. 354, 13 N. W. 269; Grandin v. Grandin, 49 N. J. Law, 510, 9 Atl. 756, 60 Am. Rep. 642; Gould v. Armstrong, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 290, 294. An examination of the cases cited by Mr. Beach in support of the rule stated by him in section 177 of his Modern Law on Contracts shows that in many of those cases the courts were careful to state that there was no fraud or want of good faith on the part of the plaintiff in the prosecution of the original action which was compromised, while, in the other cases, the statement sustaining the literal text was purely obiter. In McClure v. McClure, 100 Cal. 339, 34 Pac. 822, this court quoted approvingly from Wharton on Contracts, § 533, as follows: "As has been incidentally noticed, a promise to compromise a claim utterly unfounded will not be regarded as a valid consideration. * * * It is otherwise when a suit is brought bona fide on probable cause, and a promise to compromise such suit is a valid consideration, even though the suit should be held to be unfounded."

But whatever may be the law as to cases involving no question of illegality, it is very clear that the rule contended for by plaintiff as to the effect of a compromise of an action can have no application where the claim involved therein was wholly based upon an unlawful, as distinguished from a merely insufficient, consideration. There is no better settled rule of law than the one to the effect that the courts will not entertain any action in affirmance of an illegal contract. As was said in Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615: "It is equally well settled that no action in affirmance of an illegal contract can be maintained. When parties make such contracts they must rely upon the good faith of those with whom they deal for their performance, and that failing they are denied all redress." See note to Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, in 55 Am. St. Rep. 66. This universally acknowledged rule is not based upon any consideration for the party against whom the relief is sought and who will be benefited by the refusal of the court to grant the same, but upon considerations of sound public policy. As said in Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 118, 27 Pac. 735, "it is not for the sake of the party who is benefited by the intervention, but for the sake of the law itself," that a court refuses to allow the law and the machinery of the courts to be made use of for the enforcement of illegal contracts, and leaves the parties precisely where it finds them, under the rule expressed in the maxim, "ex turpi causa non oritur actio." It is, therefore, settled that the failure of the party against whom such relief is sought to make objection upon the ground of illegality, or the waiver of such objection by him, or even his express consent that the court may enforce such illegal contract, will not justify a court in enforcing the same. The illegality appearing, the court will sua sponte withhold all relief. See Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 118, 27 Pac. 735; Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 140, 55 Pac. 773; 9 Cyc. 550. In Ball v. Putnam, supra, this court, after saying that there was evidence tending to show that the contract which lay at the bottom of all the transactions between the parties was a contract void as against public policy, said: "Enough appears to call for a rigid inquiry by the trial judge, and if, after such inquiry, the evidence elicited leads him to believe that such is the fact, he will withhold all relief in this action, for a contract which is against public policy, good morals, or the express mandate of the law cannot be made the basis of any action, legal or equitable. Neither the silence nor consent of the parties to it justifies the court in retaining jurisdiction of such an action."

It would seem to necessarily be the case under this well-settled rule that no action of the parties or their assignees can so validate an illegal contract, as to justify a court in enforcing it, where its illegality appears. An attempted compromise of a claim based on such a contract, whether before or after institution of action thereon, would be simply an act of the parties, looking to the complete or partial ratification of the illegal contract, and which could in no way affect the power of the court to refuse to allow itself to be used as the instrument for its enforcement. We have been unable to find any case holding that a compromise of a claim based on such a contract is supported by a legal consideration, and will be enforced by the courts, and it appears to us that any such holding would be in defiance of the well-settled rule under discussion, and contrary to every consideration of public policy. It would furnish an easy method by which the parties to an illegal contract might, by their mere stipulation, validate the same, and make it compulsory upon the courts to thereafter enforce it, although its illegality was clearly made to appear. This cannot be the law. A court will not thus allow itself to be made, as has been said, "the handmaid of iniquity."

It was held in Everingham v. Meighan, 55 Wis. 354, 13 N. W. 269, that no compromise by the parties of differences in respect to clearly illegal contracts and transactions can purge them and produce a valid claim. The contract there involved was a gambling contract. The case of Reed v. Brewer (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 99, is squarely in point. The action there was upon notes given in settlement of a suit brought upon an illegal contract, and it was held that the agreement of compromise did not so change and purify the transaction as to relieve it of its vice and illegality. Quoting Bishop on Contracts, the court said: "A contract executed in consideration of a previous illegal one, or in compromise of differences, growing out of it, is, like that whereon it rests, illegal and incapable of being enforced." These decisions appear to us to be in accord with the rule under discussion, and, as already said, we have found no case holding to the contrary.

Under the rule which we hold applicable here, it would seem that the question as to whether Reid or the "undisclosed equitable owner," whom he testified that he represented, had actual notice of the circumstances under which the McMahon notes were given, was entirely immaterial in this controversy. Those notes, as already stated, were not negotiable, and the successors of McMahon took them subject to any objection that might be made to their validity. They stand here in the shoes of McMahon, and any answer to a claim based thereon that would have been available against him is available against them. This includes not only such defenses as might seasonably be urged by the maker of the notes, but also such objections to the enforcement of the claim on the ground of illegality as might appear to the courts when an attempt was made to enforce it. They took the notes with knowledge, conclusively imputed to them that, if they were ultimately found to be based upon an illegal consideration, there could be no recovery thereon, and that the maker of the notes could not by any agreement of ratification or compromise render them, or instruments given in place thereof, enforceable by the courts, when their illegality should be made to appear. The defense of want of notice of the illegality of a contract is available only where the contract is a negotiable instrument, in the hands of one who has acquired it for value before maturity, and in the ordinary course of business. See Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 64, 56 Am. Dec. 311; Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 523, 70 Am. Dec. 746; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873. It is, therefore, unnecessary to determine whether the evidence shows that Reid had actual notice of the invalidity of the notes at the time they were transferred to him. It may, however, be stated that the evidence was certainly sufficient to sustain a finding that he had full notice of the claim of defendant in this regard prior to the first attempt at compromise, and that he made the compromise with knowledge imputed to him of the fact that the original notes were based on an unlawful consideraation.

Under the views we have expressed, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony objected to, and the evidence was sufficient to support the findings in so far as the same are essential to the validity of the judgment.

Complaint is made by plaintiff that the trial court failed to find upon certain affirmative defenses tendered by the answer, viz., one of former action pending, and another of a previous order or judgment decreeing the instruments in suit to be void and of no effect. The failure to find on the issues thus tendered could not prejudicially affect plaintiff here, in view of the other findings which make it essential that judgment should go against him, even had findings been made in his favor on these issues.

WARREN v. CITY & COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 4,087.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1907. Rehearing Denied Jan. 31, 1907.)

TAXATION—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT—RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

The payment, for the purpose of preventing a tax sale, of taxes illegally assessed on a portion of a street, by one having property abutting on the street, but not on such portion, is voluntary; and so cannot be recovered by him, he not having secured an order of the board of supervisors, under Pol. Code, § 3804, for the refunding thereof; section 3819 relative to recovery of taxes paid under protest, where the assessment was void, providing therefor only where the "owner" of the property pays the tax.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Warren against the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Percy V. Long, City Atty., Wm. G. Burke, City Atty., Luther Elkins, Asst. City Atty. (A. S. Newburg, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover of defendant money paid it in redemption of a lot from the sale thereof to the city for delinquent taxes. The case was heard on appeal by the district court of appeal, First appellate district, and the judgment of the superior court affirmed. The application to have the cause heard by this court, after judgment of said district court of appeal, was pending, when a general order of April 23, 1906, granting provisionally all applications for rehearings, was made. Since then a reargument of the cause has been had in this court, and, upon a consideration of the points involved, we are satisfied that the appeal was correctly decided by said district court of appeal. The opinion of that court in disposing of said appeal is as follows:

"The plaintiff brought this action to recover from the city and county of San Francisco the money paid by him to redeem a certain lot of land from a sale made to the state of California for delinquent taxes thereon. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment of dismissal entered thereon.

"It is alleged in the complaint that the tract of land so sold to the state, and for the redemption of which the plaintiff paid the money into the city treasury, was at the time of said sale, and had been for many years prior thereto, and is now, a portion of Caroline street, an open public street duly dedicated to public use, and that, notwithstanding it had been so opened, used, and dedicated as a public street, the city and county assessor did, in the year 1896, unlawfully and in disregard of the law in such cases, assess for state and county taxes a portion of said street 100 feet in extent southeasterly from its terminus at the southerly line of Howard street, as if it were private property and not a public street; that on the 3d day of July, 1897, said portion of said street was sold to the state of California to pay said unlawful assessment for taxes against it; that thereafter the tax collector for San Francisco, pursuant to directions from the state controller, advertised said parcel of land for sale; that, in order to prevent said sale, and while said tax collector was threatening to sell the same, the plaintiff paid to the treasurer of said city and county the sum of $805.53 to redeem said land from the said illegal assessment, and to prevent and stop the said sale thereof; that he was compelled to pay the same to prevent said street from being closed and its use to him destroyed for two or more years, and that he paid the same under coercion and protest in writing; that the plaintiff was at the time of said payment, and had been for many years the owner of a lot of land fronting on said Caroline street but not abutting on that portion thereof so assessed and sold to the state; and that his said lot would be greatly impaired in value if said portion of Caroline street should be closed and he be thereby deprived of egress and ingress to and from his lot through the same.

"The plaintiff is not proceeding under section 3804 of the Political Code, as he did not obtain an order from the board of supervisors that the money paid by him to the treasurer be refunded. Section 3819 of the Political Code has no application. That section provides that the 'owner' of any property assessed, who may claim that the assessment is void, may pay his tax under protest, specifying the grounds of the protest, and that, when so paid under protest, the payment shall not be regarded as voluntary. The plaintiff herein was not the 'owner' of the land assessed nor of any land bordering or adjoining that portion of Caroline street, and had no opportunity of egress from his lot upon that portion of the street assessed, and his interest in that portion of the street was no different from that of any other proprietor whose lot bordered upon any other portion of the street. See Symons v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 555, 42 Pac. 913, 47 Pac. 453. The payment of the money by the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the facts under which it was made, was voluntary, and, under well-established rules, cannot be recovered. The assessment by the city and county assessor of a portion of an open public street was made, as is stated in the complaint, 'unlawfully and in disregard of the law in such cases,' and the plaintiff is presumed to have known that it was so made without any authority and created no lien upon the land so assessed. The sale and conveyance to the state for a delinquent tax upon such assessment transferred no title to the state, and the threatened sale by the tax collector is no respect affected the rights of the public to the use of the street or to have it remain open and unobstructed. A grantee from the state under such sale by the tax collector would acquire no right in the land, or, by reason of such sale, be authorized to close the street from use by the public. There was, therefore, no compulsion or coercion upon the plaintiff, or any duress or threatened exercise of power over his person or property, and his protest did not have the effect to take from the payment its voluntary character. Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, 79 Am. Dec. 176; Phelan v. San Francisco, 120 Cal. , 52 Pac. 38.

"The demurrer to the complaint was therefore properly sustained. The judgment is affirmed."

We are satisfied with the foregoing reasoning of the district court of appeal in the matter, and with the conclusion reached by it.

BROWN v. REA et al. (S. F. 3,925.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1907.)

1. Municipal Corporations — Obstruction of Street—Rights of Abutting Owners—Injunction—Sufficiency of Complaint.

Civ. Code, § 3479, declares anything which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use of a public street a nuisance. Section 3480 defines a public nuisance as one affecting an entire community or any considerable number of persons. Sections 3493 provides that a private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance only if it is specially injurious to himself. In an action to enjoin the construction or operation of a railroad in the street in front of plaintiff's premises, the complaint alleged that the construction and operation of the railroad would greatly obstruct the use of plaintiff's premises and impair the easement of access thereto and egress therefrom, and would greatly hamper plaintiff in carrying on his business on the premises, and lessen the value thereof. Held, that the allegations were merely statements of the plaintiff's opinion or conclusion as to the effect of defendants' proposed acts, and hence the complaint was demurrable as not showing a nuisance resulting in some special injury within the meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, 3493.

2. Same.

The operation of a railroad upon a street is not, as to abutting owners, a nuisance per se, and to warrant an injunction restraining such operation, facts must be alleged which show that a nuisance will result from defendants' proposed acts, and that plaintiff will suffer some peculiar injury therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1447, 1448, 1493, 1503.]

3. Eminent Domain—Damages to Abutting Property—Actions—Sufficiency of Complaint.

Const. Cal. art. 1, § 14, provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made. In an action to enjoin the construction or operation of a railroad in the street in front of plaintiff's premises, a complaint alleged that the proposed work would "greatly lessen and diminish the value" of the property. Held, that this was an allegation merely of opinion or conclusion, too general and indefinite to warrant relief by injunction, even if the proposed acts could be enjoined until the payment of the alleged damage.

4. Municipal Corporations — Obstruction of Street—Rights of Abutting Owners—Action for Damages—Sufficiency of Complaint.

In an action to enjoin the construction and operation of a railroad in the street in front of plaintiff's premises, and to recover damages for past injury, the complaint alleged that defendants had already commenced digging and excavating the street and "made a deep and wide trench therein, which greatly obstructs and impedes traffic on said street." There was no allegation that this trench was in the part of the street in front of the plaintiffs' premises, nor was it alleged that the trench either obstructed plaintiff's ingress to or egress from his premises. Held, that the complaint did not state a cause of action for damages.

Action by Frederick Brown against James Rea and others for damages, and for an injunction restraining defendants from digging and making an excavation in a certain street, or laying ties and rails thereon, or running cars thereon for any purpose. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. P. Veuve, for appellant. Louis O'Neal and Owen D. Richardson, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff filed a complaint alleging the following facts: That he is the owner of a lot of land in the city of San Jose, having a frontage of 88.6 feet on North Market street, a public street of the city; that upon this lot there is a building in which plaintiff is carrying on a wholesale grain and produce business, that in the conduct of said business it is necessary to use large drays and wagons to carry the merchandise to and from said premises, and that said trucks and wagons need free and unobstructed access and ingress in and to said premises from Market street. The complaint alleges that the defendants wrongfully and without right threaten and intend to enter Market street, and the part thereof immediately in front of plaintiff's premises, for the purpose of laying ties and rails thereon in the construction of two railroads, each of which will have double tracks, and that the defendants have actually commenced the digging and excavating of the street, and have already made a deep and wide trench therein which greatly obstructs and impedes the traffic on said street, and that the defendants threaten and intend to continue to tear and excavate the street and the part thereof immediately in front of plaintiff's premises, to lay ties and rails thereon, and, when the same are laid, to permanently run cars and motors thereon; that the occupation and use of said street and the part thereof adjoining plaintiff's premises and business house will irreparably injure and damage plaintiff and will greatly endanger and obstruct the use of plaintiff's premises, and will particularly and irremediably impair the right and easement of access thereto and egress therefrom, and will greatly obstruct, hamper, and impede plaintiff in the carrying on of his business on said premises, and will greatly lessen the value thereof, and will irremediably impair and destroy plaintiff's rights in Market street and his easement of access to and ingress in and to and egress from his said premises; that plaintiff has already suffered damage by reason of the premises in the sum of $1,000. The prayer of the complaint is for said sum of $1,000 and for an injunction restraining the defendants from digging and making any excavation in Market street, or laying ties and rails thereon or running cars thereon for any purpose. The railroad company and the defendant Elder demurred on the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Defendant Rea demurred upon the same ground and further specified certain particulars in which, as he claimed, the complaint was uncertain. The demurrers being submitted to the court, an order was made sustaining all of them, with leave to the plaintiff to amend within 10 days. No amendment having been made within the time allowed, the defendants had judgment against the plaintiff for their costs. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is unnecessary to consider any of the special grounds of demurrer urged by the defendant Rea, since we are satisfied that the general demurrers were properly sustained. Apparently the plaintiff attempted in his complaint to allege facts showing a threatened nuisance, the maintenance of which would be especially injurious to him. A nuisance is defined in the Civil Code, § 3479, as "anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any navigable lake, or river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway." Section 3480 of the Civil Code defines a public nuisance as "one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal." Generally speaking, a public nuisance does not furnish ground for action by a private person, but such public nuisance may inflict upon an individual such peculiar injury as to entitle him to maintain a separate action for its abatement, or to recover damages therefor. Civ. Code, § 3493. The injury to the individual must, however, be different in kind and not merely in degree from that suffered by the general public. Aram v. Schallenberger, 41 Cal. 449; Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 403; Hogan v. R. R. Co., 71 Cal. 87, 11 Pac. 876. Ordinarily an obstruction to a highway, if unauthorized and illegal, is a public nuisance. The injury is to the right to travel upon the highway, which right resides in the public generally. Such obstruction may, however, constitute a private nuisance as well. Every owner of land abutting upon a highway has a right of access from his land to the highway and from the highway to his land. This right of access is an easement, and an obstruction to the highway which at the same time obstructs this easement is a peculiar injury to the abutting landowner and gives him a cause of action. Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623, 26 Pac. 1106.

The plaintiff undoubtedly sought to allege such an obstruction of this easement as would constitute a peculiar injury to him. But in the complaint he does not set forth any facts which show that this right of access has been obstructed by the work already done, or will be obstructed or impaired by the work to be done. It is true that he asserts repeatedly that the construction and operation of the railroad will have such effect, but this is merely an allegation of his conclusions and opinions, and cannot be considered as stating a cause of action. The facts alleged are merely that the defendants are constructing and intend to operate a four-track railroad upon the street in front of his premises. These facts alone do not make it appear to the court that the plaintiff's right of passage between the street and his premises will be in any degree affected. The operation of a railroad upon a street is not, as to abutting owners, a nuisance per se. It may or may not be a nuisance, according to the manner of its construction and operation, and the surrounding circumstances. In the present case the complaint does not allege the width of the street, the location upon the street of the proposed ties or rails, whether or not the ties or rails when completed will project above the surface of the street, how often or in what manner cars or motors will be run upon the rails, or any circumstances showing anything more than that a railroad will be operated upon a street adjoining the plaintiff's premises. It is not even stated whether or not the proposed railroad is a street railroad. The mere fact that railroad cars are to be operated on a street adjoining plaintiff's property does not show any such peculiar injury to him as will justify an injunction restraining the construction and operation of the railroad.

We do not overlook the consideration that, under the constitutional provision that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made." (Const. Cal. art. 1, § 14), damages may be recovered by an abutting owner for any public use of a street which damages his adjoining property, or his easement of access to and from the street. Eachus v. L. A. Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; Kishlar v. S. P. R. R. Co., 134 Cal. 636, 66 Pac. 848; St. Clair v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 142 Cal. 647, 76 Pac. 485; Smith v. S. P. R. R. Co., 146 Cal. 164, 79 Pac. 868, 106 Am. St. Rep. 17. And, perhaps, a proposed use could be enjoined until the payment of the damage which would follow such use. But the complaint, whether seeking damages after the construction, or an injunction before, must show some actual or threatened injury to a private property right of the plaintiff, and this the present complaint fails to do. The allegation that the proposed work will "greatly lessen and diminish the value" of the property is, like other statements, a mere averment of opinion or conclusion too general and indefinite to afford a basis for relief by injunction.

So far as this is an action to recover damages for past injury, the allegations of the complaint are open to the same criticism directed against the averments of threatened acts. All that is stated is that the defendants have already commenced digging and excavating the street, and "made a deep and wide trench therein, which greatly obstructs and impedes traffic on said street." There is no allegation that this trench is in the part of the street in front of the plaintiff's premises, nor is it averred, even by way of conclusion, that the trench obstructs the plaintiff's ingress to or egress from his premises. Even if the trench were shown to be immediately opposite plaintiff's property, its character and dimensions are not described. The words "wide and deep" convey no such definite idea as is required in a pleading of this character. Since the only fact alleged as a basis for the recovery of damages is the excavation of this trench, it follows that the complaint fails to show a cause of action for damages, as well as for an injunction.

There is abundant authority in support of the principal proposition discussed in this opinion; i. e., that in an action to enjoin a nuisance there must be an allegation, not merely of the plaintiff's opinion or conclusion as to the effect of the proposed act, but a statement of facts from which the court may draw the conclusion that a nuisance will result. Some of the cases illustrating this rule are Payne v. McKinley, 54 Cal. 532; Dunn v. City of Austin (Tex. Sup.) 11 S. W. 1125; Bowen v. Mauzy, 117 Ind. 258, 19 N. E. 526; Begein v. Anderson, 28 Ind. 79; Kingsbury v. Flowers, 65 Ala. 479, 39 Am. Rep. 14; Adams v. Michael, 38 Md. 123, 17 Am. Rep. 516; Thebaut v. Canova, 11 Fla. 167; Reynolds v. Presidio & Ferries Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 81 Pac. 1118. See, also, note to Ryan v. Copes, 73 Am. Dec. 106.

BOCA & L. R. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LASSEN COUNTY. (S. F. 4,651.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1907.)

1. Constitutional Law — Due Process of Law — Deprivation of Property — Railroad Crossing—Removal.

In a suit to foreclose a railroad mortgage, petitioner, a connecting railroad, claimed a right of way for certain crossings over the right of way and tracks of the mortgagor, after which suit was brought to restrain petitioner from using one of such crossings, and a preliminary injunction granted. Affidavits having been subsequently filed showing violations of the injunction, the court, without hearing or notice, ordered that the crossing be taken up forthwith; that an agent be appointed to perform the work and to safely keep the ties, steel, and iron removed, and not deliver the same to petitioner until a further order of the court. Held, that such order constituted a deprivation of petitioner's property without due process of law, and was therefore void.

2. Certiorari—Scope of Remedy—Orders—Want of Jurisdiction.

Code Civ. Proc. § 937, provides that an order made out of court without notice to the adverse party may be vacated or modified without notice by the judge who made it, or may be vacated or modified on notice in the manner in which other motions are made. Held, that such section was applicable only to such orders as the court or judge had jurisdiction to make without notice, and did not prevent the review by certiorari of a purported order which was void for want of jurisdiction.

3. Same—Other Adequate Remedy.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, provides that certiorari may issue only where there is no appeal, and, in the judgment of the court, no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, and section 963, subd. 2, authorizes an appeal from an order granting a mandatory injunction or an order appointing a receiver. Held, that an order directing the removal of a railroad crossing and appointing an agent of the court to perform the work was not reviewable on appeal under the latter section, and was, therefore, reviewable on certiorari.

In Bank. Certiorari by Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company against the superior court of Lassen county, to review an order directing the removal of a railroad crossing. Order annulled.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari, to review an order of the superior court of Lassen county made July 14, 1906, in an action pending in that court. That action was one brought by the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, a corporation, to enforce by foreclosure the lien created by a certain trust deed or mortgage given to secure the payment of bonds issued by the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, and covering the railroad property of such last-named company situated in Lassen and Plumas counties. The plaintiff here, the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company, was made a party defendant in that action, the allegation being that it claimed some interest in the property as purchaser or judgment creditor or otherwise, which interest was subject to the lien of the plaintiff's trust deed or mortgage. The relief sought was for a sale of the mortgaged property, the application of the proceeds to the payment of the indebtedness, costs, etc., and for a judgment against the Sierra Valleys Railway Company for any deficiency that might remain after such application. The Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company, on June 1, 1906, answered in that action, claiming, among other things, a right of way for two crossings for its railroad over the right of way and track of the Sierra Valleys Railway Company in Plumas county, which crossings had been put in place and were being operated by plaintiff. The claim of plaintiff here was alleged to be superior to the lien of the trust deed or mortgage, and was based upon an alleged purchase at execution sale, and also upon certain orders made in a condemnation suit brought by said plaintiff in the superior court of Plumas county, which action is still pending. On June 19, 1906, the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company instituted an action in the superior court of Lassen county against plaintiff here, for an injunction restraining plaintiff from using one of said crossings in the operation of its railroad, the ground thereof being that such use was without right, and would depreciate the value of the mortgage security to the damage of the bondholders and the Sierra Valleys Railway Company. A preliminary injunction in accordance with the prayer of the complaint was thereupon granted. There is a claim that this injunction proceeding was dismissed by the plaintiff on June 30, 1906, but we will here assume that the action was never effectually dismissed, and is still pending. On July 14, 1906, the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, defendant in the foreclosure action, with the expressed consent of the Nevada-California-Oregon Railway, the holder of bonds secured by the trust deed or mortgage, presented in the foreclosure suit its notice of a motion, to be made on August 20, 1906, for the discharge and removal of the plaintiff trustee, on the ground that such trustee was seeking, to the prejudice of the bondholders and the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, to dismiss the injunction proceeding. Affidavits presented in connection therewith showed violations by the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company of the injunction issued in the injunction proceeding. Upon reading and filing the notice of motion, and the accompanying papers, the judge of the superior court of Lassen county, in chambers, and without any notice whatever or opportunity for hearing to the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company, and without requiring any bond or security, on July 14, 1906, made the order here under review. That order recites that it has been made to appear satisfactorily to such judge by such showing that the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company, aided and abetted by the trustee, has been using said crossings in violation of the injunction granted in the other proceeding, and that such use is detrimental to the interests of the Sierra Valleys Railway Company and the bondholders, and then provides as follows:

"Now therefore, it is ordered that so much of the said crossing and of all and singular the track, rails, ties, and materials of every kind as are not properly a part of the roadbed, railroad, and ties, or either, of said Sierra Valleys Railway Company, which were placed, laid, erected or constructed, or which now lie in, over or upon or across the right of way, roadbed and track, or either, or any of them, of said Sierra Valleys Railway Company at the point or in the section, township and range aforesaid, be taken up and removed in such manner as may be or may to the person hereinafter appointed for that purpose, seem necessary or proper, and that when so removed the ties and steel and iron so taken up and removed shall be properly placed and safely kept in as good order and condition as the circumstances permit and so that same shall not and may not until further order of this court be had or taken possession of by said Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company.

"And it is further ordered that any rail, a portion of which is now or at the time of said removal in place upon said right of way shall be taken up and removed its entire length and not cut unless interference with such removal be made or offered in which event same may be removed in part or otherwise as circumstances may require.

"And the parties hereto, all and singular, their, and each of their, agents, servants, and employés, and all persons acting or purporting to act under, in aid or assistance, or by permission or authority of them or of either or any of them, are hereby required to refrain from any and all acts of violence, and from in any wise interfering with, but any of them may aid, the execution thereof, and said defendant is particularly enjoined not to interfere with, or in any manner obstruct, the removal of said crossing, track, rails, ties, and materials, in the manner aforesaid, but to permit the same to be done peaceably and quietly, without let or hindrance.

"It is further ordered that P. F. Kinney of Reno, Nevada, be, and he is hereby, appointed as the agent and representative of this court to see that the order is carried into effect according to its true intent and meaning, and with all reasonable dispatch, with authority to and in him to call to his assistance, employ and deputize any and all persons to him seeming to be necessary or proper in so doing and therein to use such means and force as may seem necessary for the proper execution hereof, and he, the said P. F. Kinney, is hereby instructed to make full report to us of all his proceedings as such agent.

"All costs and charges for the purpose of the enforcement of this order shall be at the sole cost, and expense of said Sierra Valleys Railway Company."

In accord with the terms of this order, the agent appointed by the court, on the 14th and 15th days of July, 1906, removed said crossing, and holds the rails and ties removed in a safe place and subject to the further order of the court. On July 26, 1906, plaintiff here moved the superior court to vacate said order, and this motion was denied on the same day.

It is alleged in what is styled a supplemental return, that, on July 18, 1906, the court suspended the injunction issued in the injunction proceeding, and that on the same day the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company did itself replace the crossing removed and has ever since continually used the same. These allegations are material only upon the question as to whether this proceeding in certiorari, instituted July 30, 1906, is not a moot case, involving no actual controversy.

We know of no rule of law that can be successfully invoked in support of the order under review. It cannot be disputed that its effect was to deprive the Boca & Loyalton Railroad Company of property of which it was in the peaceable possession, and to take from it property of which it claimed to be and was, in fact, admitted to be the owner, and this, it seems clear to us, was done without the due process of law guarantied by both federal and state Constitutions. Whether it was entitled to have this property remain in the place where it was, constituting a railroad crossing over the right of way and track of the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, which was its claim made by the allegations of its answer in the foreclosure action, was a question that could only be legally determined in an orderly manner, in consonance with the rules and principles established by our jurisprudence for the determination of controversies as to property rights. The crossing constructed and maintained by it under claim of right could not be legally torn up and converted into mere rails and ties, and those rails and ties, admittedly owned by it, removed and withheld from its possession without some kind of notice and an opportunity to appear and be heard in support of its claim, for that much certainly is included in the constitutional guaranty that one shall not be deprived of property without due process of law. 8 Cyc. 1084. It may be admitted that in a proper proceeding brought to obtain an injunction prohibiting it from using the crossing, an order for the issuance of a temporary injunction prohibiting such use might legally have been made without notice. Such was the order made in the injunction case. In such a case, the party restrained would, pending the determination of proceedings on his part to dissolve the injunction, be secured by the bond required by our statute to be given. But there is nothing in our law warranting a court in ordering, without notice to the person maintaining the same in place under a claim of right, the removal of such a crossing and the confiscation of the materials composing the same. The order complained of is in violation of the constitutional guaranty heretofore referred to, and is, for that reason, void. This seems so plain as not to require further discussion. There are other objections made going to the question of the validity of this order, which it is unnecessary here to notice.

It is urged that, under section 937, Code Civ. Proc., the only remedy in case of an order made without notice to the adverse party is an application to the judge, ex parte or on notice, that it be vacated, which application is addressed to the discretion of the court. Manifestly, this provision of law is applicable only to such orders as a court or judge has power or jurisdiction to make without notice. It is not within the jurisdiction of a court or judge to deprive a person of property without due process of law, and a purported order having such an effect may be annulled on certiorari. Our law provides that the writ of certiorari may issue only where there is no appeal, and, in the judgment of the court, no plain, speedy and adequate remedy. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. It is suggested that the order complained of is, in effect, either an order granting a mandatory injunction, or an order appointing a receiver, from either of which orders an appeal would lie. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2. Manifestly, it is neither an order granting an injunction nor an order appointing a receiver. It does not prohibit or command the performance of any act by any party to the action, but simply purports, in an ordinary foreclosure action, to empower a third person, who is not a party to the action, and who is designated as an agent of the court, to remove and retain the property of petitioner. There is no suggestion in the record of the appointment of a "receiver" in the sense in which that term is used in law. A receiver may, under certain circumstances, be appointed in a foreclosure proceeding to take possession and control of the mortgaged property, but the property here ordered taken admittedly constituted no part of such property. The order was not appealable, and we cannot see that plaintiff had any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy against the same.

As we understand the record, although plaintiff has reconstructed a crossing at the original place, the materials of the old crossing removed by the agent of the court are still withheld from the possession of plaintiff under the terms of said order, which order the court has refused to vacate, although motion in that behalf was made by plaintiff. Under these circumstances it cannot be held that we have before us only a moot case, involving no actual controversy.

The order under review must be annulled, and it is so ordered.

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—AUTHORITY OF CLIENT.

While a party to an action may appear in his own proper person or by attorney, he cannot do both, so that as long as he has an attorney of record in the action the court cannot recognize any other as having management or control thereof, and the party can act only through his attorney.

2. SAME—DISMISSAL—ACT OF PARTY—CONSENT OF ATTORNEY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1, provides that an action may be dismissed "by the plaintiff himself," by written request to the clerk filed among the papers in the case, at any time before trial, on payment of costs, provided a counterclaim has not been made or affirmative relief sought by the cross-complaint or answer of the defendant. Held, that such section did not authorize a party, acting in his own proper person, to dismiss by filing a written request to the clerk, where such party had appeared by attorney and then had an attorney of record.

3. DISMISSAL—MOTION BY ATTORNEYS.

Where plaintiff, having an attorney of record, attempted to dismiss the suit without such attorney's consent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1, by filing a written request to the clerk for dismissal and paying the costs before trial, the mere making of a subsequent motion for a dismissal by plaintiff's attorney in open court did not constitute a dismissal under such section, and did not impair the jurisdiction of the court over the cause.

4. PROHIBITION—RULINGS—REVIEW.

Where, at the time an application was made for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from making any order in a certain action other than an order of dismissal, a motion to dismiss had only been partially heard and a preliminary injunction issued had been suspended, it could not be presumed, on the hearing of the application for such writ, that the court would not award petitioner all the relief he was entitled to on the determination of the motion to dismiss.

In Bank. Application for a writ of prohibition against the superior court of Lassen county and Hon. F. A. Keeley, judge thereof. Alternative writ discharged.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff seeks a writ of prohibition, restraining the superior court of Lassen county from making any order in a certain action instituted in that court by the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company against plaintiff here, other than an order of dismissal. The action referred to was one to obtain an injunction restraining plaintiff here from using a certain railroad crossing over the road of the Sierra Valley Railway Company in Plumas county, the facts in regard thereto being detailed in the opinion in Boca & Loyalton R. R. Co. v. Superior Court of Lassen County (S. F. No. 4,651, this day filed) 88 Pac. 715. An alternative writ having been issued, the defendant made answer, and the matter has been submitted upon a demurrer to such answer, there being no material conflict as to the matters which are controlling here.

The main contention of plaintiff is that the injunction action has been dismissed by the plaintiff, and that the superior court is, therefore, without jurisdiction to make further orders therein. The action was commenced on or about June 5, 1906. According to the allegations of the affidavit or complaint of plaintiff here, the plaintiff in that action, on June 30, 1906, no counterclaim having been made or affirmative relief sought by the defendant therein, sent its discontinuance in writing of said action to the clerk of said court, with its written request that he enter a dismissal of the same, all of the costs having been paid. No such entry was made by the clerk, he basing his refusal to so do upon a certain order made by the court restraining him from so doing. On July 18, 1906, plaintiff by its attorneys moved the superior court for a dismissal of said action, there having been no appearance on the part of defendant, and all costs having been paid. That motion had not been decided at the time of the institution of this proceeding. According to the allegations of the answer, the only written request for, or notice of, dismissal sent to the clerk was one signed by the plaintiff in said action by its manager, and not signed by any attorney of record, said plaintiff up to that time having appeared in said action by attorney only. It further appears that the subsequent motion for dismissal made by the attorneys on July 18, 1906, has only been partially heard, the further hearing and determination thereof having been continued by the court until the determination of this proceeding.

Plaintiff's position is that, under subdivision 1, § 581, Code Civ. Proc., providing that an action may be dismissed "by the plaintiff himself, by written request to the clerk filed among the papers in the case, at any time before trial, upon payment of costs; provided, a counterclaim has not been made, or affirmative relief sought by the cross-complaint or answer of the defendant," the presentation of the proper request to the clerk, and payment of costs, operated to divest the court of jurisdiction to make any further order in the case, other than one requiring the clerk to make the proper entry of dismissal in its register. It may be conceded for the purposes of this proceeding that, if the above-quoted provision of law was complied with by the plaintiff in the injunction action, the position of plaintiff here is sustained by the decision of this court in Hopkins v. Superior Court, 136 Cal. 552, 69 Pac. 299.

It is, however, the settled law of this state that, while a party to an action may appear in his own proper person or by attorney, he cannot do both, and that, as long as he has an attorney of record in an action, the court cannot recognize any other as having management or control of the action, and the party can act only through his attorney. It may be that good reasons can be urged in support of a contrary rule, but the rule stated is so firmly settled here that we are not warranted in now departing from it. In the early case of Board of Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 147, 87 Am. Dec. 164, the question arose under a statute similar to subdivision 2 of section 581, authorizing an action to be dismissed "by either party upon the written consent of the other," and the lower court had granted the motion for a dismissal of the action based upon the written consent of the plaintiffs in person, which consent was not signed by the attorney of record for plaintiffs. The order of dismissal was reversed by this court. The court said: "A party to an action may appear in his own proper person or by attorney, but he cannot do both. If he appears by attorney, he must be heard through him, and it is indispensable to the decorum of the court and the due and orderly conduct of a cause that such attorney shall have the management and control of the action, and his acts go unquestioned by any one except the party whom he represents. So long as he remains attorney of record the court cannot recognize any other as having the management of the case. If the party for any cause becomes dissatisfied with his attorney, the law points out a remedy. He may move the court for leave to change his attorney, as provided in section 10 of the act concerning attorneys and counselors. Until that has been done, the client cannot assume control of the case. While there is an attorney of record, no stipulation as to the conduct or disposal of the action should be entertained by the court unless the same is signed or assented to by such attorney. Such a rule is not only indispensable to the orderly conduct of a cause, but is likewise a safeguard to the client against the intrigues of his adversary." In Mott v. Foster, 45 Cal. 72, a stipulation extending time signed by the plaintiff in person where he had an attorney of record was held to be a nullity, and the same was held in Wylie v. Sierra Gold Co., 120 Cal. 485, 52 Pac. 809, the court saying that where a party appears and is represented by an attorney of record, he cannot himself assume control of the case, and that if he signs a stipulation dismissing the action or extending time for any purpose, the same will be disregarded by the court. All of these authorities are approvingly cited in Crescent Canal Company v. Montgomery, 124 Cal. 134, 145, 146, 56 Pac. 797, where the rule was again declared. The general rule thus stated does not appear to be disputed by counsel for plaintiff here, but he claims that the rule is not applicable to the dismissal provided for by subdivision 1 of section 581, which, by the express terms of the subdivision, is to be made "by the plaintiff himself." His claim is that this use of the word "himself" means that such dismissal must be made by the plaintiff in his own proper person. If this construction is to be given to the language, a dismissal under subdivision 1, § 581, Code Civ. Proc., could not be made in the manner in which such dismissals are ordinarily made, viz., through the attorney, but would in all cases be required to be made by the plaintiff in his own proper person. Such certainly has never been understood to be the law, and the language used, when considered in connection with the remainder of the section, is not reasonably susceptible of such a construction. The words relied on, which were a part of the section on the same subject in the old practice act, and which have always been a part of this subdivision of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., were used simply to distinguish the dismissal therein provided for as one that was to be made by the action of the plaintiff alone, without any concurrence of the other party or the court, while the dismissals provided for by other subdivisions of the same section could be made by a party only when upon the written consent of the other party, or by the court upon motion of a party or upon its own motion. So far as this question is concerned, the words used in subdivision 1 of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., have no different meaning from the words "by either party" upon the written consent "of the other" in subdivision 2 of the same section, as to which is was held in Board of Commissioners v. Younger, supra, that the consent must be signed by the attorney of record where there is such an attorney.

To accomplish the effect given by the decision in Hopkins v. Superior Court, supra, to a written request for dismissal under subdivision 1 of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., the case must be brought squarely within the terms of that subdivision, and to do this, the request for dismissal must, under the authorities cited, be signed by the attorney of record for plaintiff, if there be such an attorney. Otherwise, the clerk is not authorized to recognize the same as a discontinuance of the action, or to make entry of dismissal in his register, and the jurisdiction of the court over the cause is not impaired. The mere making of the subsequent motion by the attorneys for plaintiff for a dismissal, in open court, on July 18, 1906, was not a dismissal under subdivision 1 of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., or in the manner or form provided by that subdivision, and in no degree impaired the jurisdiction of the court over the cause. Whether or not the court should grant that motion in the face of the showing in opposition made by the parties beneficially interested in the maintenance of the action, and for whom plaintiff had commenced and was maintaining the action solely as a trustee, is a question it is not necessary here to decide. That motion is pending undetermined. Its pendency does not affect the jurisdiction, and we must now assume that it will be correctly determined.

It was further urged on the application for a writ of prohibition that, under the circumstances alleged to have been shown to the superior court of Lassen county on the motion to dismiss made July 18, 1906, said court is without jurisdiction to grant or maintain an injunction enjoining plaintiff here from using the railroad crossing situate in Plumas county. As already stated, the motion of July 18, 1906, has only been partially heard and is now pending undetermined. According to the allegations of the answer, pending its determination, the preliminary injunction issued in the action has been and is now suspended, under the terms of an order of the superior court of Lassen county. Under such circumstances, we cannot now assume that the superior court will not, in determining said motion, grant plaintiff here all the relief to which it is legally entitled, and, in accord with our settled rule of practice we should decline to restrain the court below from proceeding, in advance of the ruling of such court, on said motion. See Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 403, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192.

This is sufficient for all the purposes of this proceeding.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1907.)

1. Assistance, Writ of—Scope—Mortgages—Foreclosure.

Where the estate of the deceased wife of a deceased mortgagor was not made a party to foreclosure proceedings, the estate's equitable interest could not be adjudicated on an application by the purchaser under the foreclosure proceedings for a writ of assistance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assistance, Writ of, § 1.]

2. Injunction—Writ of Assistance.

The right of a party to restrain the execution of a writ of assistance depends on his being in possession of the property at the time the writ was sought to be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 61.]

3. Administrators — Real Estate — Possession.

On an application by an administrator to restrain the execution of a writ of assistance, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the administrator was not in possession of the property.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against Charles H. Robinson and others. From an order discharging an order to show cause why the execution of a writ of assistance should not be perpetually restrained, obtained by Clarence W. Purrington, as administrator of the estate of Caroline A. Robinson, deceased, he appeals. Affirmed.

SLOSS, J. The Hibernia Savings & Loan Society commenced an action to foreclose a mortgage on several parcels of real estate in the city and county of San Francisco. Some of the defendants named in the complaint defaulted, and a decree of foreclosure was made and entered in regular form as against them. The plaintiff became the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, and, no redemption having been made within the statutory time, received the commissioner's deed on October 30, 1902. On May 13, 1903, the plaintiff procured a writ of assistance and delivered it to the sheriff of the city and county for execution. This writ directed the sheriff to put the plaintiff in possession of one of the parcels of land included in the foreclosure proceeding. On May 14, 1903, Clarence W. Purrington, as administrator of the estate of Caroline A. Robinson, deceased, filed in the superior court an affidavit alleging that Caroline A. Robinson at the time of her death was the owner and in possession of the piece of land described in the writ of assistance, and that affiant had on the 8th day of October, 1901, been duly appointed her administrator, and ever since had been and still was in the actual possession of the property in question. Upon this affidavit the court below made an order directing the plaintiff to appear and show cause why an order should not be made perpetually restraining the execution of the writ of assistance and restraining the sheriff from in any manner interfering with the possession of Clarence W. Purrington as such administrator. Upon the hearing of the order affidavits and counter affidavits were read and oral testimony was taken. Thereafter, on the 20th day of November, 1903, the court made an order discharging the order to show cause. Purrington, as administrator, now appeals from the order of November 20th.

The mortgage had been executed by Charles H. and Thomas B. Robinson. Thomas B. had died before the commencement of the action, and his executors, together with Charles H., were made defendants, and judgment was taken against them. The estate of Caroline A. Robinson was not made a party to the foreclosure proceedings, and her interest, if she had any, was not affected by the foreclosure decree. Nor could her claim of title be adjudicated in a proceeding like the one under review. "The courts will not undertake to settle the conflicting legal or equitable rights of persons not parties to a foreclosure suit, upon an application for a writ of assistance; to adjudicate such rights upon affidavits or on a motion." Enos v. Cook, 65 Cal. 175, 3 Pac. 632. Any person claiming title to property has the right to litigate the validity of his claim in a proceeding in which the question of title can be properly presented and determined. As this court said in Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405: "If his title is claimed to be invalid or fraudulent and void, he is entitled to be heard according to the forms of law. * * * The issue as to such title should be tried in an appropriate action, in which the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court may be had upon issues properly framed for the purpose of definitely determining the question of title." And, if a person not made a party to foreclosure proceedings is in possession under a claim of title, he has a right to protect his possession by the procedure here adopted, to wit, a motion to restrain the execution of the writ of assistance. Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48.

Indeed, these propositions are not contested by the respondent, which concedes that, if Purrington as administrator was in possession of the premises at the time of the issuance of the writ, the order asked for by the appellant should have been made. The contention of respondent is, however, that Purrington was not and never had been in possession of the premises. Undoubtedly his right to restrain the execution of the writ of assistance depended upon his being in possession; for, if he was not, his rights could not in any degree be affected by the execution of the writ. Whether or not he was in possession was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court. In making the order complained of, that court evidently found as a fact that the estate of Caroline A. Robinson was not in possession of the premises, and the only question here is whether that implied finding is sustained by the evidence. A brief statement of the facts shown on the hearing will suffice to demonstrate that there was more than sufficient evidence to support the conclusion reached. It appeared that the person in actual physical occupation of the premises was Walter T. Robinson, a son of Thomas B. Robinson, one of the mortgagors. Thomas B. Robinson and Caroline A. Robinson had been husband and wife. Caroline died in 1891, Thomas in 1897. From the death of Caroline A. Robinson in 1891, Walter T. Robinson lived upon the premises with his father until 1897, and after his father's death remained there until the time of the hearing in the court below. The real issue between the parties was whether Walter T. Robinson was in possession as a tenant of Purrington, the administrator of Caroline A. Robinson's estate, as asserted by the appellant, or whether he held by virtue of some other claim. At the hearing the appellant introduced an affidavit of Purrington himself, in which he averred that ever since his appointment as administrator he had been in the actual possession of the property. In response to this the respondent offered the affidavit of George A. Clough, denying this allegation on information and belief, and setting forth certain facts which, as is claimed, tend to show that Purrington, Walter T. Robinson, and George D. Collins, the attorney for the appellant, had entered into a fraudulent scheme to retain possession of the said property. We will not further notice these charges of fraud, as we do not deem them important here. Counter affidavits were filed by the appellant, one being the affidavit of Collins and the other that of Walter T. Robinson, both of which deny the charges of fraud and assert positively that Purrington was in possession as administrator, Robinson averring that his occupancy of the premises was exclusively under the said administrator and as his agent.

So far as these affidavits are concerned, it may be conceded that the affidavit of Clough, being merely on information and belief, leaves the positive allegations of the appellant's affidavits without substantial contradiction. But at the hearing the respondent called and examined both Purrington and Walter T. Robinson, and their oral testimony was decidedly at variance with their affidavits. Purrington testified that as administrator he had not handled any money, nor made out accounts, nor drawn any rents. While he stated that the property was occupied by Walter Robinson as his tenant, he also stated that such tenant did not pay any rent; that he did not know why he let Robinson stay; that during the two years of his administration he (Purrington) had never asked for any rent; that he had not paid any of the bills against said property, such as gas and water charges; that he had not paid any taxes; and that he had never taken any steps to get possession of the property. He testified further that he had never been in the house, and that he did not think he had ever spoken to Walter T. Robinson about the possession of the premises. His only explanation of his failure to ask for rent was that he understood that the tenant was not able to pay. Walter T. Robinson testified that he had been living on the property since 1891; that he had been living there with his father until 1897, and had continued to live there since the death of his father; that he had paid the taxes on the property and the water rates; that the administrator had never asked him for any rents; and that the only conversation they had had regarding the property was that the administrator had asked him occasionally whether he was still living on the property, to which he had replied that he was. He had also stated to the administrator that he had paid the taxes. On cross-examination he testified that, while he had paid the taxes, he had not given the receipts to the administrator, and that, when he did pay the taxes, he paid them in the name of his wife, Isabelle W. Robinson.

On this testimony we do not see how the court could have failed to come to the conclusion which was reached, namely, that the statements in the affidavits of Purrington and Robinson to the effect that the latter was holding as tenant of the Caroline A. Robinson estate were collusive and false, and that, in fact, Purrington as administrator had never been in possession of the premises, either in person or by tenant. Under these circumstances the appellant was not entitled to restrain the issuance of the writ of assistance.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations—Bonds—Purposes of Issue—Provisions for Payment—Liability of City.

Act March 23, 1876 (St. 1875–76, p. 433, c. 326), provides for the widening of Dupont street by the city of San Francisco, and the raising of the money to do so by the sale of bonds to be paid out of a tax upon the lands within a specified district declared to be benefited by the improvement. It also provided that all claims against the city for any part of the debt so created were waived. Held, that the bonds were not a general obligation of the city, to be enforced by a personal judgment against it.

2. Mandamus — Pleading — Complaint — Sufficiency.

A complaint, to authorize a writ of mandamus to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, must show an existing duty and a failure to perform the same on demand.

3. Municipal Corporations—Bonds—Remedy for Enforcement—Bonds Payable from Special Fund.

Act March 23, 1876 (St. 1875–76, p. 433, c. 326), authorized the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to pass an order for the widening of Dupont street in the city. It provided that all damages and expenses should be paid by bonds of the city and county, and that for the payment of the interest and principal there should be levied a tax upon the lands benefited thereby. It further provided that the city and county should not be liable for the debt so created. Held, that the bonds as issued, being nominally the bonds of the city and county, to be paid from a special fund, which it was the duty of such corporation to provide, the holders could maintain an action to recover a judgment thereon against the city and county, to establish and perpetuate the bonds as a claim upon the funds to be raised under the act and to prevent the bar of the limitations.

4. Same—Payment—Interest after Maturity.

Where bonds were issued under Act March 23, 1876 (St. 1875–76, p. 433, c. 326), providing for the payment of the principal and annual interest and nothing more, and creating a specific fund for the payment of the bonds, no liability could arise to pay interest on the principal or annual interest after maturity under the general statute, providing for interest on all contracts after maturity.

5. Same — Actions — Defenses — Necessary Parties.

In an action against a city to enforce the payment of certain bonds, payable out of a special fund, provided by a tax levied on certain property in the city, it was averred that there was an unauthorized overissue of the bonds. Held, that the question whether this defense can be made without an allegation that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder cannot be decided in an action in which the owners of the property against which the tax is levied were not made parties.

6. Same.

In an action against a city to enforce the payment of certain bonds payable out of a special fund, provided by a tax levied on certain property in the city, it was alleged that certain owners of the property against which this tax was levied had obtained judgments perpetually enjoining the tax collector of the city from collecting this tax on the lands owned by them. Held, that the question whether these judgments bind both the city and the bondholders, neither of whom were parties to the actions in which the judgments were rendered, cannot be decided in an action in which the owners of the property affected by the judgments were not made parties.

Action by Albert Meyer against the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Franklin K. Lane, City Atty., Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman (D. Freidenrich, of counsel), for appellant. Rosenbaum & Scheeline, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover of the defendant the amount due upon 13 Dupont street bonds, issued by the defendant and held by the plaintiff. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled by the court below, the defendant answered, and thereupon, upon motion of plaintiff, judgment was entered for the plaintiff upon the pleadings, from which the defendant appeals.

The complaint alleges the execution of the bonds, sets forth one of them verbatim; states that the others are of the same tenor and effect, differing only in the number; avers that the plaintiff is the holder of the bonds, and that the sum of money named in the bonds is due from the defendant to the plaintiff and is unpaid, although payment of the same has been demanded. The bonds became due, according to their terms, on January 1, 1897. The suit was begun on December 31, 1900. The prayer is for an ordinary judgment against the defendant for the amount of the bonds sued on, and for costs of the action. The bonds state on their face that they were issued under the provisions of the act of March 23, 1876 (St. 1875–76, p. 433, c. 326), for the widening of Dupont street, and that they were to be paid out of the fund to be raised by taxation as provided in that act. The provisions of the act referred to are thus made a part of each bond. The fund in question was to be raised by means of a special tax to be levied annually for 20 years upon the lands within a certain district described in the act, in a sufficient amount, each year, to pay the annual interest on the bonds and one-twentieth of the principal thereof. Separate annual levies were to be made, one for the interest and the other for the annual installment of the principal. Section 22 (page 443) of the act is set forth in full in each bond, with the statement that the bond is issued by the city and taken by the holder thereof under the conditions therein expressed. This section declares in substance that the completion of the work of widening the street as provided in the act should be deemed an acceptance by the landowners of the lien created by the act for the tax to be levied, and should operate as a waiver by the holders of the bonds of all future claim upon the city and county of San Francisco for any part of the debt created by the bond. The record is silent as to the date of the completion of the work provided in the act, but, as no question is raised concerning it, we will assume that it was completed before the suit was begun.

The effect of these provisions and conditions is that there is no obligation on the part of the city and county of San Francisco to pay the bonds, and that the amount named therein never became due from the defendant as alleged. The bonds were to be paid out of a special fund, to be raised by certain city officers by means of a special tax upon the lands within a specified district declared to be benefited by the improvements. All claims against the city for any part of the debt was waived, and the debt was due out of the funds to be raised in accordance with the provisions of the act, and not otherwise. It never became a general obligation of the city, to be enforced by a personal judgment against it, such as that prayed for in the complaint.

The judgment so obtained cannot be upheld under the allegations of the complaint. Mandamus lies to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. To authorize a writ the complaint must show an existing duty and a failure to perform the same on demand. People v. Romero, 18 Cal. 91; Crandall v. Amador Co., 20 Cal. 75; Oroville, etc., Co. v. Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 363. No breach of duty is alleged except the failure to pay the bonds. Under the provisions of the act that duty could not arise until there had been sufficient funds raised by the special tax, applicable to these bonds, to pay the same. Cramer v. Sacramento, 18 Cal. 384. This fund may or may not have been raised. It is not alleged, and it is not to be presumed.

But, although no action could be maintained to recover a general judgment against the city for the money due on the bonds, and the complaint is insufficient to authorize a writ of mandamus, conceding that a mandamus suit to enforce payment of the bonds would lie against the city in any case, we think that the plaintiff may, nevertheless, maintain an action against the city on the bonds, not to enforce payment thereof, but to establish and perpetuate them as a claim upon the funds to be raised under the act, and to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations. At the time the action was begun but one day remained of the period of limitation. By the expiration of that period the plaintiff would have been barred forever of all right to enforce payment of the bonds, which the demurrer admits to be valid and unpaid. The delay was not the fault of the plaintiff. Circumstances might exist under which it would not be the fault of the defendant, or its officers, and in which plaintiff could not force payment by mandamus, as, for instance, if the officers, although exercising reasonable diligence, had been unable to collect the tax until after the period of limitation had run. In such a case the plaintiff would be practically without remedy if he could not maintain an action to prevent the running of the statute against him. Justice requires that he shall have some means of preventing his claim from becoming outlawed. No better or more appropriate remedy can be suggested than that of an action of the character above indicated.

In this conclusion we are supported by the example of the federal court in a somewhat analogous case. Those courts have no original jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus. The writ can only issue after judgment and in aid of its enforcement and execution. U. S. v. County Court, 122 U. S. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. 1171, 30 L. Ed. 1152; Labette Co. v. Moulton, 112 U. S. 217, 5 Sup. Ct. 108, 28 L. Ed. 698. With respect to bonds which constitute an obligation against a portion only of the county or city, and which do not constitute a general obligation against such corporation, those courts found themselves in somewhat of a dilemma. The bonds in question there, as here, purported to be issued by the city or county, respectively, but it was held that they did not constitute a general obligation against the obligor sufficient to authorize a general judgment thereon. In those courts, if no judgment could be obtained, there could be no mandamus, and a bondholder would be without remedy therein to enforce his obligation. In this situation it was said: "The holder of these bonds cannot have any remedy in the federal courts unless he is entitled to recover a judgment thereon and to enforce such judgment, if necessary, by mandamus. * * * It seems to us that the provision that the bonds shall be issued in the name of the county implies a liability on the part of the county to be sued, so far as is necessary to give effect to the rights of the holders of the bonds. * * * This is to be effected by the nature of the judgment we render, which is not a personal judgment against the county, but only a judgment judicially establishing the plaintiff's debt." Jordan v. Cass Co., 3 Dill. 185, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,517, p. 1088. This case was followed by Cass Co. v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360, 24 L. Ed. 416; Davenport v. Dodge Co., 105 U. S. 237, 26 L. Ed. 1018; and Mather v. San Francisco, 115 Fed. 37, 52 C. C. A. 631. The latter was an action upon some of the Dupont street bonds, of which the bonds in suit in this case at bar form a part. Upon similar reasoning we can say that the provision that the bonds here involved should be issued in the name of the city and county implies that the city and county can be sued, when necessary to preserve the plaintiff's rights and prevent the bar of the statute of limitations, and that in such action a judgment can be given establishing the debt for that purpose. The prayer of the complaint may be disregarded. It does not measure the plaintiff's rights. The complaint entitles him to some relief and the demurrer was therefore properly overruled.

We are of the opinion, however, that in giving judgment on the pleadings the court improperly allowed the interest which accrued on the bonds after their maturity. The act in question provided a scheme for a public improvement, the cost of which was to be paid by a special assessment upon the lands in the district specially benefited thereby. For this purpose the assessment district was created, and upon the real property therein there was imposed the burden of such payment. This burden was laid by the defendant without the consent of the owners of the property. The Legislature has power to do this for the purpose of defraying the expense of public improvements; but such statutes are to be construed in favor of the property owner, at least to this extent, that the burden imposed cannot exceed that which the terms of the statute, either expressly or by fair implication, authorize. This statute not only does not expressly authorize a charge of interest on the bonds after their maturity, but its provisions fairly imply that such interest was not to be paid. It provides that the bonds should be "payable in twenty years from their date, unless sooner redeemed, as in this act provided," and that they should "bear interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable semi-anually." This language does not necessarily imply that interest is to run after maturity. Coupons for the annual interest, consecutively numbered, were to be attached to each bond in such manner as to be easily removed. It was further provided that a tax should be levied annually upon the lands in the district to pay the interest as it matured, and that the money thus raised was "to be paid out by said treasurer only in payment of the coupons attached to said bonds, as the same from time to time become due," and that at the same time and in the same manner there should be annually levied a tax sufficient to pay one-twentieth of the principal, to constitute a sinking fund and which should be paid out only in redeeming the bonds. Provision was made for calls for bonds to be paid in the order of issuance whenever there was on hand $10,000 or more of the sinking fund. The 20 annual levies thus provided for, if made and collected as required, would fully pay the entire amount of principal and interest of the bonds. We think the provision of the act requiring the interest coupons to be attached to the bonds is to be understood as meaning that coupons were to be attached for each year's interest accruing up to the time of their maturity. There is no provision for the attaching of any coupons for interest accruing after maturity. And, in view of the rules of construction applicable to such acts, we must hold that there is no authority either to issue such coupons or to attach them to the bonds. The provision that the levy made for the payment of interest was to be applied "only" to the payment of the coupons implies that no tax was intended to be levied for any interest except that represented by the coupons, and hence that it was not to be levied for interest accruing after maturity. There being no provision for the payment of any interest accruing after maturity, the act must be understood as intending that no such interest was to accrue. The case of Kendall v. Porter, 120 Cal. 108, 45 Pac. 333, 52 Pac. 143, is cited to the contrary. We think, however, that the act there construed is easily distinguishable from that here involved. The bonds there under consideration were the general bonds of the city of Sacramento, and both the principal and the interest was to be paid out of a certain fund consisting of a certain proportion of the general annual revenues of the city. This revenue would, of course, continue indefinitely after the maturity of the bonds as well as before. There was not in that case separate taxes for the interest and the principal, to be applied exclusively for the purposes for which it was levied, nor a specified number of levies to be made for a specified number of years. There was no certainty that the fund provided in that case from the annual revenues of the city would be sufficient to pay the bonds at or before their maturity, as is the case here. The court held that the act not only failed to show an intent to terminate the interest upon the maturity of the bonds, but that it indicated with some clearness an intent that they should bear interest until paid. The provisions and circumstances above noted, which do not exist here, are sufficient in our opinion to distinguish that case from the present one, and to require the contrary conclusion as to its effect and purport. The present case is more like those of Bates v. Gerber, 82 Cal. 550, 22 Pac. 1115, and Davis v. Sacramento, 82 Cal. 562, 22 Pac. 1118, which involved the interest on the coupons which were attached to the bonds in question in Kendall v. Porter, supra. It was held in those cases that the interest coupons did not bear interest after maturity. The court said: "The act provided for the payment of the principal and annual interest, and nothing more. There was no other fund out of which the interest demanded could have been paid." So here the act provides that a fund should be raised annually during the time the bonds were maturing, but no longer, and there is no provision for the payment of subsequent interest. It was said in Bates v. Gerber and Kendall v. Porter, supra, that "the statute is the measure of the bondholders' rights." It is also the measure of the property owners' burden. No provision being made for the payment of any further amount than that of the principal and interest accruing up to maturity, no further interest can be allowed.

Section 1917 of the Civil Code, which provides that "unless there is an express contract in writing, fixing a different rate interest is payable on all moneys at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, after they become due on any instrument of writing," does not apply here, because, as we construe the act of 1876, it does, by fair intendment, declare that interest shall not be payable after maturity.

The answer attempts to aver that there was an unauthorized overissue of the bonds. It does not allege any facts showing that the plaintiff's bonds constituted a part of this alleged overissue. The statute appears to contemplate that bonds might be issued at different times until the aggregate issue equaled the authorized amount. In such a case the bonds would all be valid, except those issued after the limit was reached.

The question is raised as to whether, in view of the recitals on the face of the bonds, this defense can be made without an allegation that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder. This question, we think, ought not to be decided in the absence of the property owners, or some one of them, at least, who might represent them all. Neither the city, nor its officers, have any substantial interest in the question. It is the property owners who must bear the additional burden, if any there be, and none of them are parties to the action.

It is also alleged that certain property owners have obtained judgments, which remain in full force, perpetually enjoining the tax collector of the city and county, and his successors in office, from collecting from the lands owned by them any tax levied under the act, that the levies provided for in the act were regularly made each year for the 20 years, as required, upon all the lands in the district, and that the tax has been paid upon all of said lands, except that levied upon the lands protected by the said judgment. It is claimed that these judgments bind both the city and the bondholders, neither of whom were parties to the actions in which the judgments were rendered. This question is also one in which the property owners concerned are vitally interested, and which should not be decided until they have an opportunity to be heard. When the case is remanded, these property owners should be made parties to the action, if the plaintiff desires to attempt in this action to obtain judgment for any relief other than to establish the debt and prevent the bar of the statute of limitations. We are satisfied that he can obtain a judgment of this character without making the property owners parties, but this rule can be allowed only with the qualification that a judgment against the city alone, which merely has that effect, would not bind the owners of the property, nor estop them from showing that the bonds were invalid, or not enforceable, for other reasons.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

NICHOLDSON v. NESBITT, Sheriff. (Civ. 332.)

1. JUDGMENT — LIEN — PRIORITY OF CONVEYANCE.

The filing of an abstract of a judgment rendered in another county created no lien against land where the debtor had previously conveyed it and the deed had been recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1325.]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—HOMESTEAD.

A voluntary conveyance of a homestead cannot be regarded as in fraud of creditors, since, being exempt from execution, its transfer could not hinder nor prejudice them.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 118.]

3. APPEAL—PRESENTATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUND OF REVIEW—NECESSITY FOR.

Where a sheriff levied upon land which had been previously conveyed by the debtor and was enjoined from selling it on the theory that, having been the debtor's homestead, the conveyance could not be void as in fraud of his creditors, on appeal the sheriff could not have the judgment modified so that it might be determined whether the value of the land exceeded the statutory homestead limitation, where no issue of that nature was presented to the lower court.

HARRISON, P. J. Action to enjoin the appellant, as sheriff of the county of Monterey, from selling certain real property of the plaintiff situate in that county, under an execution issued upon a judgment against her grantor. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed therefrom upon the judgment roll without any bill of exceptions.

April 14, 1892, Murdock Nicholdson was the owner and seised in fee and in possession of the real property described in the complaint, and was a married man residing thereon with his family, and on that day Emma M. Nicholdson, his wife, made, executed, and acknowledged a declaration of homestead in proper form upon said property, which was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of that county. The said homestead was not in any manner abandoned until January 12, 1903, when said Nicholdson and his wife executed a conveyance thereof to the plaintiff herein, who is their daughter, which was duly recorded the next day in the office of the county recorder, and she has, since said conveyance, been in the possession of said property. No money or other valuable consideration was paid by her for said property, the conveyance to her reciting the consideration of "love and affection." July 16, 1902, a judgment was rendered by the superior court in and for the county of Santa Clara in favor of Michael Cassin and John Tarpey and against the aforesaid Murdock Nicholdson for the sum of $2,050.72, which is still unsatisfied. At the time of the aforesaid conveyance to the plaintiff the said Murdock Nicholdson had no other property with which to satisfy said judgment. February 13, 1903, a duly certified abstract (transcript?) of the docket of said judgment was filed in the office of the county recorder of Monterey county. June 5, 1903, a writ of execution upon said judgment was issued out of the superior court of Santa Clara county, and placed in the hands of the appellant as sheriff as aforesaid, with instructions to levy the same on the aforesaid real property. Under said instructions the appellant on July 1, 1903, levied the said writ of execution upon the property, and gave notice, in the manner provided by law, that he would, by virtue of said writ and levy, sell the same in satisfaction of the aforesaid judgment. The plaintiff thereupon commenced the present action to restrain him from making the sale. The sheriff filed an answer to the complaint, and defended his action upon the aforesaid writ. The other defendants made no appearance in the case. Upon these facts the superior court held that the plaintiff was the owner in fee of the property, and that it was not subject to the lien of the judgment against her grantor, or liable for the payment of any portion thereof, and rendered judgment enjoining the sheriff from selling the same and from taking any further proceedings under said writ.

As the conveyance to the plaintiff and the record thereof were made prior to the time when the transcript of the docket of the Santa Clara judgment was filed in Monterey county, the filing of the transcript of that docket created no lien upon the property described in the complaint. The property was, therefore, not affected by the judgment until the levy thereon under the writ of execution issued out of the Santa Clara court, and prior to the time of such levy the property had been conveyed to, and stood of record in, the name of the plaintiff, without any interest therein in the judgment debtor. Accordingly the sheriff defends his acts and his right to sell the property by virtue of this levy, upon the ground, as alleged in his answer, that the conveyance to the plaintiff is void in that it was executed for the purpose of delaying and defrauding the creditors of said Murdock Nicholdson, and especially said Tarpey and Cassin, and in support thereof invokes the provisions of section 3442, Civ. Code, that "any transfer or incumbrance of property made or given voluntarily or without a valuable consideration by a party while insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, shall be fraudulent and void as against existing creditors." Section 3441, Civ. Code, declares that "a creditor can avoid the act or obligation of his debtor for fraud only where the fraud obstructs the enforcement by legal process of his right to take the property affected by the transfer or obligation," and section 3442 is to be construed with the limitations provided in this section. A voluntary transfer of property by an insolvent is valid against all persons except his creditors, and can be impeached as fraudulent by them only when they have been defrauded thereby. Under section 3440, Civ. Code, the transfer must not only be fraudulent, but it must be made with intent to defraud his creditors. But unless the transfer can have the effect of defrauding the creditor there can be no presumption that the insolvent intended to defraud him. If the creditor could not, under any circumstances, cause the property so transferred to be applied toward the satisfaction of his debt, he has suffered no injury, and cannot claim to have been defrauded.

As the property herein involved was the homestead of the judgment debtor, and for that reason exempt from execution or forced sale in satisfaction of the judgment upon which the writ of execution was issued, it was beyond the reach of the judgment creditor, and therefore he was not defrauded by the transfer. In Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045, the homestead had been sold, and the husband had made a gift of the proceeds to his wife, for which she had taken from a banking house a certificate of deposit in her own name. Thereafter certain creditors of her husband sought, by a writ of attachment, to subject this certificate of deposit to their claims against the husband. The Supreme Court held: "The homestead from which the money was derived was not subject to the claim of any creditor of the plaintiff's husband, and a transfer of it by the husband to her could not, under any circumstances, be held, as a matter of fact, to be with the intent to defraud his creditors. His creditors could not by any legal process take the property covered by the homestead, and its voluntary transfer to the wife would not 'obstruct the enforcement by legal process of any right to take the property affected by the transfer' (Civ. Code, § 3441); neither would such transfer of its proceeds." "As general creditors have no claim or lien upon the homestead of the debtor, it follows naturally that a conveyance or incumbrance of such homestead cannot, as a rule, be fraudulent as against them. And this has been held true though there was no consideration for the conveyance." Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 664, citing in support of the last proposition authorities from several states. "Creditors are held not defrauded by the conveyance of the homestead without consideration. Having no right to make their money by execution against it, they have no cause to complain. It is incumbent on the creditor who complains of a fraudulent conveyance to show that his debtor has disposed of property that might otherwise have been subjected to the satisfaction of his debt. Until this is done no injury appears. Creditors cannot complain that a conveyance of a homestead is fraudulent as to debts for the payment of wihch it cannot be taken in execution. They could not reach it if not conveyed, and hence the motives for the conveyance do not concern them." Waples on Homestead, 519. See, also, Thomson v. Crane (C. C.) 73 Fed. 329 [Nev.]; Fellows v. Lewis, 65 Ala. 343, 39 Am. Rep. 1; Rhead v. Hounson, 46 Mich. 244, 9 N. W. 267; Stanley v. Snyder, 43 Ark. 430; Anderson v. Odell, 51 Mich. 492, 16 N. W. 870; Tracy v. Cover, 28 Ohio St. 61; Arthur v. Wallace, 8 Kan. 267.

We cannot entertain the proposition of the appellant to modify the judgment of the superior court so that the defendants may have it determined whether the value of the homestead premises exceed the sum of $5,000; no issue of that nature is presented in the defendant's answer, nor was any motion of that nature presented to the superior court; nor is any fact set forth in the record upon which such modification could be based.

JOHNSON et ux v. CENTER. (Civ. 318.)

1. Appeal—Motion for Nonsuit—Record.

Where the record fails to show on what grounds a motion for a nonsuit was made, the court on appeal cannot say that the trial court erred in overruling it.

2. Railroads—Injuries to Persons on Track—Negligence—Question for Jury.

Evidence in an action against a railroad for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a train examined, and held, that the question of the negligence of the railroad was for the jury.

3. Same—Contributory Negligence—Question for Jury.

Evidence in an action against a railroad for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a train examined, and held, that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

4. Evidence—Opinion Evidence—Admissibility.

A witness, in an action against a railroad for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a train, cannot testify that the engineer in charge of the train took every precaution that an engineer could take to stop the train and avoid the accident; that being a matter to be determined from the evidence.

5. Appeal—Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence—Harmless Error.

Where, in an action against a railroad for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a train, the conductor and engineer in charge of the train had testified as to what the engineer did do to stop the train and prevent the accident, and when he did it, the sustaining of an objection to the question, asked the conductor, as to what precaution the engineer took to stop the train and prevent the accident, was not prejudicial.

6. Negligence—Contributory Negligence—Last Clear Chance.

Though one by his own negligence places himself in a place of danger, another may not wantonly injure him, and, if aware of the danger, must use ordinary care to avoid injury, and is liable for a failure so to do.

7. Railroads—Injury to Travelers—Action—Evidence—Instructions.

Where, in an action for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a train, the evidence showed that the engineer in charge of the train saw that the traveler was in a place of danger in time to have avoided the accident by the use of the appliances at his command, the refusal to charge that where there has been mutual negligence, and the negligence of each contributed to the injury, no recovery could be had, was proper, for, if given without qualification, it would confuse the jury.

8. SAME.

Where, in an action for injuries to a traveler, the evidence showed that the engineer in charge of the train saw that the traveler was in a place of danger in time to have avoided the accident, and the court charged that there could be no recovery for injuries negligently inflicted on one person by another, where the injured person by his own negligence proximately contributed to the injury, and could have avoided the injury by reasonable care, unless the employés in charge of the train wantonly so operated it as to cause the collision, an instruction that where both parties have been equally negligent, and the negligence of each directly contributed to cause the injury, no recovery could be had, was not erroneous, though it was not a complete statement of the law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

D. W. Burchard, C. L. Witten, H. W. McComas, and W. R. Bowden, for appellant. W. B. Hardy and Jackson Hatch, for respondents.

HALL, J. Plaintiffs are husband and wife, and brought this action for damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted on the wife, Hilma Johnson, by the servants of defendant in running a railroad train against a buggy in which said Hilma Johnson was riding, whereby she was thrown from the buggy and her foot caught under the engine and injured. The action was tried before a jury, and the verdict was in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

At the close of plaintiffs' case defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied; but the record fails to show upon what grounds the motion was made, for which reason we cannot say that the court erred in its ruling. The record simply states that at the close of the plaintiffs' case "defendant moved the court for a judgment of nonsuit in said action," and that it was argued, denied, and exception reserved, being almost an exact counterpart of the record in Durfee v. Seale, 139 Cal. 603, 73 Pac. 435, where it was said: "The motion in this case did not specify any grounds whatever, and the motion was therefore properly denied." See, also, Silva v. Holland, 74 Cal. 531, 16 Pac. 385.

It is contended by defendant that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict, and in this regard it is claimed that the evidence fails to show that Mrs. Johnson was injured by any negligence or fault of defendant, and that it conclusively appears that she was injured as the result of her contributory negligence. We do not think the contention of appellant upon this point can be sustained. It appears from the record that at the time of the accident defendant operated a steam railroad along a public highway known as "Alum Rock Avenue." Upon each side of the railroad tracks were two traveled wagon roads; the one upon the southerly side, with which this case is mostly concerned, being separated from each other by a ditch and a row of trees. Over the ditch, however, at irregular intervals, were driveways. On the day of the accident the plaintiffs, with their two year old child and Miss Johnson, a sister of Mr. Johnson, were returning to San José from Alum Rock Springs. Mr. Johnson was on a bicycle, and rode about 100 yards ahead of the buggy, in which were the two women and the child. The buggy was drawn by a 13 or 14 year old gentle horse, one that had been used by Mr. Johnson in San José on former occasions, and had never appeared to be afraid of electric cars, and on the morning of the day of the accident on their trip to Alum Rock had passed the railroad train of defendant without showing any symptoms of alarm. Miss Johnson, a young woman 22 years of age and accustomed to driving, was driving the horse, and Mrs. Johnson held the sleeping child. When they first saw the approaching train it was 1,000 feet or more away, and they were on the roadway on the north side of the track. They crossed the railroad track to the first roadway south of the track in safety, and the horse proceeded for a time along the road without showing any signs of alarm, and then stopped, threw up his head, and showed signs of being alarmed at the approaching train. Although Miss Johnson whipped the horse and urged him forward, he presently commenced to back, and finally, notwithstanding her whipping and urging, cramped the buggy and backed it onto and across the railroad track, so that the horse was on the track, and finally, getting turned so that his head faced away from the train, he started forward and drew the buggy again onto the track, where the hind wheel was struck by the engine, and Mrs. Johnson thrown out. There is evidence in the record that when the buggy was backed onto the track the engine was 100 yards away from the buggy, and could have been stopped within a distance of 125 feet. There was evidence tending to show that the engineer saw horse and buggy and women before the horse commenced to back, and watched them all the time, and yet did not slow down his engine until within 60 or 100 feet of the buggy. Upon some of these points there was, as is usual in such cases, a sharp conflict of testimony, and we are stating the evidence that is most favorable to plaintiffs. If the jury believed the evidence that tended to show that, when the engine was 100 yards away from the buggy, the engineer saw that the driver (a woman) could not manage the horse, and that he had backed the buggy onto the track, and yet took no steps to slow down or stop his train until within 60 or 100 feet of the buggy, we cannot say as matter of law that they were not justified in finding that the engineer was guilty of negligence which caused the accident that followed.

Neither can we say as a matter of law that the driver of the horse was guilty of negligence, because she drove what appeared to be a perfectly gentle horse along a public traveled highway traversed by a railroad track. While it is claimed by counsel for defendant that the driver of the horse caused him to back the buggy onto the track, the evidence for the plaintiff does not show it, but simply shows that the horse became unmanageable, and without fault of the driver backed onto the track.

The contention that the verdict is not supported by the evidence cannot be sustained.

The court properly sustained plaintiffs' objection to the question put to the conductor: "Did the engineer take every precaution that an engineer could take to stop his train and prevent the accident?" This was a matter to be determined by the jury from the evidence as to what he did, when he did it, and under what circumstances. The next question, however, "What precaution, if any, did the engineer take to stop the train and prevent the accident?" might very properly have been allowed; but inasmuch as the conductor, as well as the engineer, had already testified fully as to what the engineer did do and when he did it, we do no think the ruling of the court in disallowing the question justifies a new trial of the action. On examining the testimony given by the conductor we find that he testified that the slowing down of the train commenced about 100 yards from the rig, that it was then going 9 or 10 miles an hour, and he (the engineer) reduced it about one-half; that the reduced speed was kept up until the train got near the rig, when the train stopped. He also said that when the horse commenced to back, which he said was when the train was 20 feet away, the engineer reversed the engine. The objection to the question was as to its form only, and was sustained apparently upon that ground; and while the objection to the question seems to us a little hypercritical, we do not think the ruling of the court was intended to prevent, or did prevent, the defendant from eliciting from the witness any fact within his knowledge concerning what the engineer did. Defendant did not reform his question, or further attempt to draw from the witness testimony as to any particular thing that the engineer did.

Defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "Where there has been mutual negligence, and the negligence of each party contributed to cause the injury, no recovery of damages can be had"—which the court refused, but in lieu thereof instructed the jury as follows: "Where both parties have been equally negligent, and the negligence of each party directly contributed to cause the injury, no recovery for damages can be had." It is now urged by defendant that the court erred, both in refusing the instruction requested, and in giving the substituted instruction. First, as to the refusal to give the requested instruction, while it states a general rule of liability, it is not without qualification applicable to all cases. Thus, although a person by his own negligence has placed himself in a place of danger, another person may not wantonly injure him, but, if aware of the danger to the first party, must use ordinary care to avoid injuring such person. For a failure so to do such person is liable in damages. "The party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered solely responsible." Esrey v. Southern Pacific Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500. In the case at bar there is evidence which tends to prove that the engineer of the train saw that Mrs. Johnson was in a place of danger in ample time to have avoided the accident by the use of the appliances at his command. The court was, therefore, justified in refusing the instruction as requested. If given without qualification, it would have been confusing and misleading to the jury.

Neither was the defendant injured by the giving of the substituted instruction; for, while it is not a complete statement of the law, it is correct so far as it goes. It is true that where both plaintiff and defendant are equally negligent, and the negligence of each party directly contributes to cause the injury, no recovery for damages can be had. In other instructions the court fully protected the defendant from any injury by reason of the incompleteness of the statement of the law as to contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff contained in the instruction now under consideration. Thus the court, at the request of the defendant, charged the jury as follows: "I instruct you that there can be no recovery for damages for injuries negligently inflicted upon one person by another, if the injured person by her own negligence, or by the negligence of another person legally imputed to her, proximately contributed to the injuries"—and also: "If the party injured could have avoided the injury by the use of reasonable care, then plaintiffs cannot recover unless the defendant's employés willfully and wantonly so operated the train as to cause the collision." For these reasons, the court did not err in giving the modified instruction.

1. PLEADING—ANSWER—AMENDMENT.

Where the facts relied on as a defense were either defectively or erroneously stated in the answer, and it did not appear that the defect or error was incurable, the court properly permitted an amendment in which defendant could allege, not only the facts previously stated, but also defensive matter coming to defendant's knowledge after the sustaining of a demurrer to the original answer.

2. HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING WIFE.

Where property covered by a homestead declaration had been selected from the community property of the husband and wife, it vested absolutely in the wife on the death of her husband, and, while held by her, retained its homestead character.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — CLAIMS — FAILURE TO PRESENT — EFFECT—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, provides that, if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead left by a deceased person, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate, and, if the funds of the estate be not sufficient to pay them, the liens or incumbrances shall be enforced against the homestead only for the deficiency remaining after payment of the proportionate amount allowed from the estate; and section 1500 declares that no holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator. Held, that where a widow executed a mortgage on the homestead, which vested in her on the death of her husband, and on her death the holder of the mortgage failed to present any claim against her estate within the time limited for presentation of claims, no action could thereafter be maintained thereon either to recover the debt or to foreclose the mortgage.

4. HOMESTEAD—TERMINATION OF EXEMPTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a widow became vested of a homestead on the death of her husband, and thereafter mortgaged the same and died, there was no presumption that she left no family surviving her and that the homestead exemption terminated on her death; but the burden of proof of such facts was on the holder of the mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. E. Greene, Judge.

HARRISON, P. J. Action for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed to the plaintiff by Julia A. E. Hinz, since deceased. Judgment was rendered in favor of the respondent, and the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll, including a bill of exceptions.

The facts presented at the trial, as appears from the record, are as follows: September 19, 1903, the property described in the complaint was the community property of said Julia A. E. Hinz and her husband, John J. A. Hinz, and on that day the said Julia executed an acknowledged in proper form and caused to be duly recorded a declaration of homestead thereon. The property was at that time subject to a mortgage, which had been executed to the plaintiff by the husband in 1890 to secure his promissory note for $3,000. Prior to the maturity of this note, viz., November 13, 1894, the said John and Julia executed to the plaintiff their joint and several promissory note for the sum of $3,000, payable in one year thereafter, and for the purpose of securing its payment executed and delivered to the plaintiff a mortgage of the said property. November 25, 1894, the husband died testate, devising the premises in question to his wife Julia. October 19, 1899, Julia executed to the plaintiff the note and mortgage set forth in the complaint herein in renewal of the note and mortgage made by herself and husband. She died February 18, 1901, leaving a last will and testament, wherein the respondent, Auguste Laidlaw, was appointed executrix. Her will was admitted to probate March 18, 1901, and letters testamentary on her estate were on that day issued to the said executrix. Thereafter, upon the order of the court, due and legal notice was given by the executrix to the creditors of Julia to present to her for allowance their claims against the estate of her testatrix. The plaintiff did not present to her any claim upon the note or mortgage set forth in the complaint, but after the time for presentation of claims had expired brought the present action for the foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the property in satisfaction of the note.

1. The defendant filed an answer to the complaint, to which the plaintiff demurred, and its demurrer was sustained, with leave to the defendant to amend. An amended answer was thereafter filed, and the cause was tried upon the issues raised thereby. The appellant urges, as one of the grounds for the reversal of the judgment, that the demurrer should have been sustained without leave to amend; and it also urges that the defendant should not have been allowed to set up in her answer a defense different from that presented in her original answer. There was no error in the order allowing the defendant to amend her answer. If the facts relied upon for a defense were either defectively or erroneously stated therein, and it did not appear that the defect or error was incurable, the court was justified in giving her an opportunity to properly present the facts. When the amended answer was filed, the plaintiff made no motion to strike out that portion claimed by it to be a new defense, but went to trial upon the issues thereby raised. It cannot, therefore, after waiting for the judgment, make this objection to the character of the answer upon an appeal therefrom. It may be added that if there was a defense to the action, which the defendant did not set forth in her original answer, even though she had no knowledge of such defense, or of the facts constituting the same, until after the order made sustaining the demurrer, it would have been the duty of the court, upon her request, to allow her to amend her answer in order that such defense might be presented. Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786.

2. The property covered by the homestead declaration, having been selected from the community property, vested absolutely in Julia upon the death of her husband, and while held by her retained its homestead character, and was under the same protection and immunity as it was during the existence of the community. Sanders v. Russell, 86 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 852, 21 Am. St. Rep. 26. Its subsequent mortgage by her to the plaintiff had no effect upon its character as a homestead other than does the mortgage of a homestead which is executed by both husband and wife. It became thereby subject to the lien of the mortgage, and during her lifetime was subject to foreclosure and sale in an action by the plaintiff therefor. Upon her death, however, the provisions of section 1475, Code Civ. Proc., became operative, and required the plaintiff, as holder of the mortgage, to present its claim secured thereby for allowance as other claims against her estate, and, after such presentation, it had the right to have the claim paid out of the general funds of the estate so far as these funds were available, and to enforce the lien of its mortgage against the homestead for any deficiency remaining after such payment. Its failure, however, to make such presentation, deprived it of the right to enforce its mortgage for any part of its claim. Camp v. Grider, 62 Cal. 20; Mechanics' B. & L. Ass'n v. King, 83 Cal. 440, 23 Pac. 376. Section 1500, Code Civ. Proc., declares that "no holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator." The only exception to this rule is where a mortgagee seeks to enforce a lien upon certain specific property of the estate; and unless the claimant brings himself within the exception his failure to present his claim to the executor or administrator precludes him from maintaining any action upon his claim. But where the mortgage is upon property which is subject to a claim of homestead, section 1475, Code Civ. Proc., limits the exception in section 1500 to an action for its foreclosure during the lifetime of the mortgagor (Sanders v. Russell, supra), and requires the holder of the claim secured by such mortgage to present the same "as other claims against the estate." The plaintiff, by reason of its failure to present to the executrix of Julia its claim upon the promissory note set forth in the complaint herein, is not only unable to maintain an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage, but by the above provision of section 1500 is also precluded from maintaining any action on the note independent of the mortgage. The extinguishment of the mortgage lien, by reason of such failure to present its claim, did not give it the right to bring an action upon the note without such presentation. Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Thornton, 109 Cal. 427, 42 Pac. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 52.

3. Other questions are discussed in the briefs of counsel; but, as they have no connection with the foregoing defense, and as the rulings of the trial court thereon, even if erroneous, would not affect the above conclusion, they need not be considered. The proposition of appellant that the provisions of section 1475 are inapplicable, for the reason that upon the death of Julia the homestead ceased to exist, does not arise upon the facts contained in the record. It does not appear therefrom that she did not leave a family for which the homestead is to be preserved. Whether she did or did not leave a family is not shown; and, as there is no presumption upon the question, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish the fact upon which it contends that the provisions of the section are inapplicable.

1. Appeal — Stay of Proceedings — Execution—Conveyance of Property.

A judgment debtor, who perfects an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and who gives the usual bond for costs and a stay bond in proper form, may dispose of his real estate owned at the time of the docketing of the judgment, provided the conveyance is not made with intent to defraud his creditors; the judgment creditor having no lien on the land after the giving of the stay bond.

2. Execution—Restraining Sale—Right of Action—Cloud on Title.

A sale of land on an execution under a judgment against the grantor of the holder of the legal title of the land will cast a cloud on the title, and will be enjoined.

3. Injunction—Property and Rights Protected—Bona Fide Purchasers.

The holder of a junior title, who seeks the aid of a court of equity to protect his title against the holder of a senior title, must aver and prove that he is a purchaser for value without notice, actual or constructive.

4. Execution — Restraining Sale — Complaint—Sufficiency.

A complaint in an action to restrain a judgment creditor from selling land under an execution against a former owner, which alleges that plaintiff is the holder of the legal title to the land, prima facie shows that plaintiff is entitled to the protection of his title from the cloud that would be cast thereon by the sale under the execution.

5. Appeal—Stay Bond—Sufficiency.

A stay bond given by a party against whom a judgment had been rendered for $900.29, with costs in the sum of $90.25, recited the rendition of a judgment for $900.99 and for costs amounting to $87.58, and that the party was "desirous of staying the execution of said judgment during the pendency of the appeal" from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and that the party and his sureties were bound "in the sum of $200, being double the amount named in said judgment." Held, that the bond was a sufficient stay bond for $2,000; the error therein being a clerical one, not affecting its validity.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Paul P. Austin against the Union Paving & Construction Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant the Union Paving & Construction Company appeals. Affirmed.

D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. R. Percy Wright, for respondent Austin. George D. Squires, for respondent sheriff.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying the motion of defendant Union Paving & Contracting Company for a new trial. The first point to be considered is that the court erred in overruling appellant's demurrer to the complaint. The action was brought to restrain and enjoin the defendants from selling a piece of land alleged to be owned by plaintiff under a writ of execution under a judgment in favor of appellant and against one Ellen Mowry, a former owner of the land. The complaint alleges that plaintiff is, and ever since the 17th day of January, 1903, has been, the owner in fee of the land described in the complaint, and sets up his chain of title, from which it appears that such title was derived by mesne conveyances from Ellen M. Mowry, who was the owner of the land when a judgment in an action wherein appellant was plaintiff and Ellen M. Mowry was defendant was docketed. From the complaint it appears that Ellen M. Mowry took and perfected an appeal from an order denying her motion for a new trial in said action by giving the usual bond for costs in the sum of $300 and a stay bond in the proper form in double the amount of the judgment, after which she conveyed the land to George Mowry, who subsequently conveyed it to plaintiff. The judgment having been affirmed, defendant in this action took out execution and was proceeding to sell the land thereunder.

The point urged in support of the demurrer is that it is not averred in the complaint that plaintiff, or his immediate grantor, was a purchaser in good faith or for value. Plaintiff, however, according to the allegations of the complaint, is the owner of the legal title. At the time of the conveyance from Ellen M. Mowry a stay bond had been given, and appellant had no lien on the land. She had a right to sell it, or otherwise dispose of it, provided she did not dispose of it with intent to defraud her creditors, which intent will not be presumed. A sale of lands upon an execution against the grantor of the holder of the legal title will cast a cloud upon the title, and will be enjoined. Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133; Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 175; Einstein v. Bank of California, 137 Cal. 47, 69 Pac. 616. In the latter case it is said: "The plaintiff is the owner of the legal title and in possession. It is presumed, until otherwise determined, that her title is good. The fact that the conveyance was made to her by her husband while indebted to defendant corporation would be a circumstance to be carefully considered in determining the question as to whether or not the conveyance was made with a fraudulent intent as to creditors; but upon an application for a temporary injunction we know of no rule that would require the court to presume that the conveyance was fraudulent, and, before the trial of the question, allow a sale to be made, thus clouding the plaintiff's title and compelling her to resort to an independent action for the purpose of removing such cloud." Undoubtedly the holder of a junior title, who seeks the aid of a court of equity to protect his title against the holder of a senior title, must aver and prove that he is a purchaser for value without notice, actual or constructive. Thus the holder of a subsequent recorded deed, in order to prevail over the holder of an unrecorded prior deed, must aver and prove that he was a purchaser for value and without notice. His right to recover depends upon such facts, and the cases cited by appellant are all of this character. Everson v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 3 Pac. 641; Mariner v. Smith, 27 Cal. 652. But in the case at bar plaintiff alleged himself to be the holder of the legal title, and as such was prima facie entitled to have his title protected from the cloud that would be cast thereon by the sale under the execution against his grantor. Pixley v. Huggins, supra; Porter v. Pico, supra; Einstein v. Bank of California, supra. The court did not err in overruling appellant's demurrer to the complaint.

The only other point in the case concerns the sufficiency of the bond given in the action against Ellen M. Mowry to stay execution of the judgment against her pending the appeal, and thus to release her land from the lien of said judgment. The defendants objected to the admission of the bond in evidence, and also raised the same point upon motion for nonsuit. The bond is set out in full in the findings, and thus the point is again presented in the contention that the findings do not support the judgment. The objection to the sufficiency of the bond is that by it the sureties were not bound in double the amount of the judgment appealed from. It is alleged in the complaint in this action that the judgment recovered against Ellen M. Mowry was for the sum of $900.29, together with costs in the sum of $90.25. This allegation is not denied by the answer, and thus stands as an admitted fact. The bond given was in the usual form, and correctly recited the giving of the judgment, except that it stated the amount of the judgment to be $900.99 and costs in the sum of $87.58. After providing for a liability in the sum of $300 to cover costs and damages on appeal, the bond proceeds as follows: "And whereas, said appellant is desirous of staying the execution of said judgment during the pendency of said appeal from order denying motion for a new trial we do further, in consideration thereof and of the premises, jointly and severally undertake and promise, and do acknowledge ourselves jointly and severally bound, in the further sum of $200, being double the amount named in said judgment, that," etc. Appellant contends that by the terms of the stay bond the sureties became bound in the penal sum of $200, and no more. If this contention be correct, the bond did not release the land of the judgment debtor from the lien of the judgment, and the judgment in this action should be reversed.

We do not think the contention of appellant is well founded. It is true that the liability of sureties cannot be extended beyond the true meaning of the terms of their contract; but this rule does not preclude the application of the ordinary rules for the interpretation of contracts. In Longfellow v. McGlynn, 56 Minn. 312, 57 N. W. 926, which was an action against sureties on a bond, the court said: "We are bound to assume that the parties intended the instrument to be effectual, not nugatory. And if what was intended as the condition may be ascertained from the terms, read in connection with the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, as shown by those circumstances, the bond was executed, it must be sustained. * * * To thus ascertain what the parties intended by the instrument executed is strictly consistent with the rule that a surety is not to be held beyond the contract he has entered into. What contract he has made is to be determined by the same rules of interpretation as are applied to other contracts; the purpose being to ascertain what he has bound himself to do. When that is ascertained, his obligation is strictly limited to it." In London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 58 Pac. 164, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64, in discussing the rules applicable to the interpretation of the contract of a guarantor, it is said: "But for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the language which he has used, and thus determining the extent of his guaranty, the same rules of construction are to be applied as are applied in the construction of other written instruments. His liability is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of his guaranty as thus ascertained. The language used by him is, however, to receive a fair and reasonable interpretation, for the purpose of effecting the objects for which he made the instrument and the purpose for which it was to be applied." In Swain v. Graves, 8 Cal. 549, suit was brought upon an appeal bond in which the word "plaintiff" was by mistake used instead of "defendant" or "appellant," and yet it was held that the action could be maintained. The court said: "An appeal bond will be so construed as to carry out the obvious intentions of the parties. People v. Judges of Oneida Common Pleas, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 28; Yocum v. Barnes, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 497. 'To support the condition of a bond the court will transpose or reject insensible words, and construe it according to the obvious intent of the parties.' 1 Saund. 65." In Grant v. Brotherton, 7 Mo. 458, the sureties bound themselves in the sum of "two thousand," and it was held that the bond should be read as though the word "dollars" followed the words "two thousand"; it appearing from the face of the bond that it was given to secure the forthcoming of property of the value of $1,000. The court supplied an omission so as to effectuate the evident purpose of the parties.

"A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." Civ. Code, § 1647. The bond now under consideration upon its face showed that it was given to stay execution of a judgment for nearly $1,000, and, though the penal sum written in the bond is $200, it is followed by the recital, "being double the amount named in said judgment." The purpose of the bond was to secure a stay of execution, to do which the law requires a bond in double the amount of the judgment, and of this the sureties are presumed to have knowledge. On reading the bond, with knowledge of the law and the purposes stated in the bond for which it was given, the ordinary mind is forced to the conviction that by a misprision and clerical error there was written in the bond "$200" insead of "$2,000." This conviction is further strengthened by the provision in the bond that if the judgment be affirmed, and appellant does not pay the same within 30 days after filing of the remittitur, judgment for the same may be entered against the sureties on motion. This in fact, was done, as appears from the undenied averment of the complaint. The conditions that, if the appellant fails to pay the judgment costs, and damages, which, if affirmed as a whole, would amount to about $1,000 or over, judgment may be entered against the sureties for such amount, is quite inconsistent with the idea that the sureties bound themselves only in the sum of $200. Judgment could only be entered against them for $1,000 upon the theory that they had bound themselves in at least that amount. Interpreting the words of this bond in the light of the circumstances under which it was given, it is evident that the sureties intended to bind themselves in the penal sum of $2,000.

GLASS v. GLASS. (Civ. 305.)

1. Divorce — Jurisdiction — Disposition of Separate Property.

Though in an ordinary divorce proceeding the court has no jurisdiction to dispose of the separate property of either party, yet where plaintiff sought, not only divorce, but an adjudication as to the separate character of the land and a decree quieting title thereto, and both parties submitted the question to the court, neither making objection to the joinder nor to the evidence offered under their respective claims, the court acquired jurisdiction to determine the question and to quiet title to the rightful owner.

2. Quieting Title—Interest Conveyed on Agreement to Pay Mortgage—Materiality of Maturity Where Promise was Repudiated.

Where a wife sued to quiet her title as against her husband to an undivided one-half of the land, claiming the whole as her separate estate, and he answered that the land was his separate estate, that she had obtained a conveyance of an undivided half upon a promise that she would discharge a mortgage upon the whole, and that she had failed to do so, and she denied having made the promise, it became unnecessary for him to show whether or not the mortgage had matured.

3. Appeal — Review — Presumptions—Vacation of Orders—Presumption of Regularity.

All intendments are in favor of a court's judgment vacating an order previously made, and in the absence of a showing to the contrary it will be presumed that the order was made in a manner and under such circumstances as justified its vacation.

4. Divorce—Order for Attorney's Fees—Authority to Vacate.

In a divorce action, the trial judge could vacate an order for the payment of attorney's fees, made ex parte, upon the wife's misrepresentation that she had no separate estate.

Hester & Ladd and E. W. Freeman, for appellant. W. C. Batcheller and G. E. Delevan, Jr., for respondent.

ALLEN, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a portion of the judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county and from an order denying a new trial.

Plaintiff, in her complaint, which was one for divorce based upon grounds of extreme cruelty, joined therewith an action to quiet her title as against defendant to an undivided one-half of certain described premises, claiming the whole thereof to be her separate estate. Defendant answered, joining issue upon all of the allegations of the complaint and further filed a cross-complaint for a divorce, charging plaintiff with extreme cruelty, and in addition alleged that the whole of the premises described in the complaint were his separate estate, that plaintiff had obtained a conveyance from defendant of an undivided one-half thereof upon the representation and promise that she would pay and discharge a mortgage lien existing upon the whole of said premises, that this she had failed and refused to do, and by reason thereof the consideration for said conveyance had wholly failed. Plaintiff answered his cross-complaint, denying that she ever made such promise and that said property was the separate estate of defendant. Upon the trial the court found both parties guilty of extreme cruelty, one towards the other, but nevertheless granted plaintiff a divorce. Upon the issues raised in relation to the property described, the court found that the property mentioned was of the value of $2,500 and was the separate property of the defendant; and, further, that the agreement of plaintiff to pay such mortgage was the sole consideration for the conveyance to her of the undivided one-half; and, further, that, the property being subject to a declaration of homestead, the same was awarded to defendant, under section 146 of the Civil Code. The court further found that at the commencement of the action plaintiff was the owner of a separate estate of the value of $7,500, exclusive of the property claimed in the complaint, and vacated a former order directing the payment by defendant to her of $100 as attorney's fees for prosecuting the action.

Appellant contends that under the authority of Reid v. Reid, 112 Cal. 277, 44 Pac. 564, no jurisdiction in divorce proceedings is in the court to dispose of the separate property of either party. This is true in an ordinary proceeding for divorce. But in the case under consideration the action instituted by plaintiff was dual in its character, seeking, as it did, not only a divorce, but an adjudication as to the separate character of certain described property, and a decree in effect quieting her title thereto. The issue was fairly made as to the property, and both parties submitted the question to the court for determination, and neither party made any objection to the joinder, nor to the evidence offered in support of their respective claims, and the court, under the pleadings and circumstances of the trial, had jurisdiction to determine the question involved as to the character of this property and to quiet the title of the rightful owner thereto.

It is further insisted that the agreement to pay the mortgage was a personal one and not a condition of the conveyance, and, even if it were a condition, no evidence was offered to show that the mortgage was either due or payable. The court found, and there is evidence in its support, that plaintiff made the agreement, and that it was the sole consideration for the conveyance to her of the undivided one-half interest, and that she never paid any part of such mortgage debt. This agreement she repudiates in her answer, and in her original complaint lays claim to the whole of the property. It is obvious, from the position assumed by her, that she never intended to carry out this agreement. "A promise made with the intention of not performing it constitutes a fraud for which a contract may be rescinded or avoided." Russ, etc., Co. v. Muscupiabe, etc., Co., 120 Cal. 530, 52 Pac. 995, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186. The total failure of consideration made it unnecessary to give notice of rescission before bringing the action (Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 382, 63 Pac. 692), and the repudiation of the contract rendered the matter of its maturity immaterial; for, when plaintiff brought her action asserting sole and separate ownership in the whole of the property, it amounted to a notice of repudiation of her promise theretofore made, or, at least, that she would not do or perform any contract theretofore made having as its consideration an assumption of defendant's interest in the premises.

It is next contended that the court was without jurisdiction to vacate the former order in relation to attorney's fees. That such order may be entered as a judgment, and, when so entered, an appeal will lie, is no longer an open question; but such order may be made ex parte, and is usually so made. Mudd v. Mudd, 98 Cal. 320, 33 Pac. 114. This, of course, comprehends previous service of process. By section 166 of the Code of Civil Procedure, orders which are usually granted in the first instance upon ex parte application may be made at chambers. Section 937 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that orders made out of court without notice may be vacated or modified without notice. All intendments are in favor of the judgment of vacation made by the court, and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the court made the order in the manner and under such circumstances as justified the subsequent vacation and the final judgment. "The rule with reference to the power of a court to revise its own action suffers an exception in the case of ex parte proceedings." In re Sullenberger, 72 Cal. 552, 14 Pac. 513. The record discloses that the court was imposed upon when the order for fees was procured. "The object of section 137 of the Civil Code is to enable the wife to properly present her cause of action, * * * and, if she can do this by reason of the fact that she has sufficient separate estate, * * * the court would not exercise a proper discretion in directing the husband to defray her expenses in the case." Mudd v. Mudd, supra. Plaintiff in the complaint, and upon which the order was based, alleged that she had no separate estate. This the court found upon the final hearing to be untrue; that, on the contrary, she was possessed of an income-producing separate estate. Where an order ex parte has been procured not in consonance with law, and from which rank injustice must follow, the court has power, when it discovers the mistake, to correct the error, and the injured party is not remitted to an appeal for remedy. Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 402, 9 Pac. 646. The record discloses, by an examination of the dates of the commencement of the action and of the final decree, that the vacation was within six months after the entry of the original order, and it will be presumed, in support of the judgment of vacation, that it was within a reasonable time thereafter.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

1. APPEAL—GRANTING NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

Where an order granting a new trial was general in its terms, the court, on appeal, will examine the record, and, if there be any error justifying the court in making the order, it will be affirmed.

2. SAME — DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT — GRANTING OF NEW TRIAL FOR INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain material findings, is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its rulings thereon will not be reversed unless the discretion was abused.

3. DEEDS—DELIVERY—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether or not a deed has been delivered is a question of fact determined in each case by its own particular circumstances.

4. SAME—WHAT CONSTITUTES DELIVERY.

To constitute a delivery of a deed it must appear that the grantor intended to part with the title to the property described in the deed, and that he parted with the deed by placing it beyond recall.

5. SAME — EVIDENCE OF DELIVERY — SUFFICIENCY.

While between a grantor and a grantee the question of the delivery of the deed is to be determined by preponderance of the evidence, the rule is that, where rights of third parties have intervened, the proof of nondelivery of a deed must be clear and convincing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 625.]

6. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a deed, duly signed and acknowledged, is found in the possession of the grantee, satisfactory evidence to overcome the presumption of delivery is required to prove a nondelivery.

7. NEW TRIAL — VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE.

On the issue of the delivery of a deed, the evidence showed that the deed was duly acknowledged before a notary, and was found in the possession of the grantee therein named, and was placed on record. There was evidence that, when the deed was executed, the grantor handed it to the grantee, who took it. Held, that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial after a judgment of nondelivery.

8. APPEAL — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS — NEW TRIAL.

Where there is no bill of exceptions showing what evidence was offered on the hearing of a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, or whether or not affidavits were read on the hearing, the presumption is that the order granting a motion was regular, and that proper affidavits were offered in support thereof.

COOPER, J. Action to quiet plaintiff's title to the lands described in the complaint. The case was tried before the court, findings filed, and judgment entered in favor of plaintiff. The court afterwards granted defendant's motion for a new trial, and from the order so made the plaintiff has appealed.

The order was general in its terms, and all presumptions are in its favor. This court will examine the entire record upon which the order was based, and, if there be found in the record any error which would have justified the court in making the order, it will be affirmed. Baldwin v. Napa, etc., Wine Co. (Cal. App.) 81 Pac. 1037, and cases cited. One of the grounds of the motion was the insufficiency of the evidence to justify certain material findings, and in such case the motion is addressed to the discretion of the court below, and will not be reversed except it appears that there was an abuse of such discretion. Bledsoe v. Decrow, 132 Cal. 314, 64 Pac. 397; Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 560, 69 Pac. 294; Baldwin v. Napa, etc., Co., supra.

The record shows that prior to September 1, 1902, David FitzGibbon, deceased, was the owner, and seised in fee simple, of the property; that on said day said FitzGibbon executed and acknowledged a deed, conveying said property to his two aged sisters, Mary Ann McCann and Eliza Stoddard. After the death of said FitzGibbon, the deed was recorded, and defendants claim through said deed. If the deed was delivered by FitzGibbon to the grantees therein named, the title was in defendants, and the judgment should have been in their favor. Whether or not a deed is delivered is a question of fact to be determined in each case by its own particular circumstances. It must appear, in order to constitute a good delivery, that the grantor intended to part with the title to the propery described in the deed, and that he parted with the deed by placing it beyond recall. While between a grantor and a grantee the question of delivery is one to be determined by a preponderance of evidence, the rule is somewhat different where the rights of third persons have intervened. In such case the proof of nondelivery should be clear and convincing. The deed signed and acknowledged before a notary public was prima facie evidence of delivery (Civ. Code, § 1055; McDougall v. McDougall, 135 Cal. 316, 67 Pac. 778), and when found in the possession of the grantee it requires satisfactory evidence to overcome the presumption of delivery (Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151). We do not deem it proper to discuss the evidence in such a way as to express an opinion upon the question as to whether or not the evidence shows that the deed was delivered in this case. It is sufficient to say that it was duly acknowledged before a notary public, was found in possession of the grantees therein named, and was placed upon record. There was evidence to the effect that, when the deed was executed, the deceased handed it to his sisters, the grantees, who took it. Suffice it to say that the court did not abuse its discretion in granting the new trial for the reasons above indicated.

Another ground of the motion for a new trial was newly discovered evidence. This could have been shown by affidavits used on the hearing of the motion. There is no bill of exceptions stating what was done, or what evidence was offered on the hearing of the motion, or whether or not affidavits were read. In such case the presumption is that the order was regular, and that proper affidavits were offered and read in support of the motion. Skinner v. Horn, 144 Cal. 278, 77 Pac. 904; Wyckoff v. Pajaro Valley, etc., Co., 146 Cal. 681, 81 Pac. 17.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of defendants Del Ponte and Persico, and from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The action is in form an action to quiet title to a tract of land described as "lot seven (7) of the Higuera Rancho," but, as appears from the answer of defendants Del Ponte and Persico, and from the statement on motion for new trial, the only real controversy in the case was as to the ownership of certain water flowing from a spring on lot 7 of said rancho, through an iron pipe, to lot 4 of said rancho, and the right of way therefor. Defendants pleaded that they were the owners of said water, water right, and right of way, and specially pleaded "that for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action they and their grantors have been in the open, notorious, continuous, peaceful, uninterrupted use and occupation of all that part or portion of said water flowing from the said spring on said lot seven of said Higuera Rancho, and to the said lot four of said Higuera Rancho; that the said use and occupation of said water as aforesaid has been for all of said time hostile and adverse to any claim of all persons, and that the said water has been so used by the said defendants and their grantors with the full knowledge of the said plaintiff." The court found the facts in accordance with the plea of the prescriptive right thus set up, and gave judgment accordingly. Appellant attacks the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding.

This action was commenced July 21, 1903. The Higuera Rancho, prior to her death, belonged to the mother of plaintiff. In 1886 she caused a pipe to be laid from a spring situate on lot 7, now the property of plaintiff, to lot 4, now the property of defendants, for the purpose of conveying water to the family dwelling, which was situate on the portion of the rancho now known as "lot 4." From that time until the commencement of this action it is perfectly clear that the pipe has remained and water has run through it and been used by the various and successive owners of that portion of the rancho (lot 4), for irrigating an orchard and the usual domestic purposes. Mrs. Higuera died in 1889. October 8, 1891, as the result of a suit in partition, a decree of partition was rendered by the superior court of Santa Clara county, in which lot 7 of said rancho was awarded to plaintiff herein, and lot 4 to Martin Higuera, a brother of plaintiff, who died before the trial of this action. The only reference to water rights in the said decree is in these words: "And it was then and there in open court agreed by all the parties having interests in said land and premises that said Bernardo Higuera should have the ownership and exclusive use of the two springs of water nearest his house on said land."

Both parties introduced evidence to show whether or not the spring that is the subject of this controversy was one of the two springs referred to in this decree. While plaintiff and several of his relatives testified that the spring from which the iron pipe leads was one of two nearest Bernardo's house, and was intended to be reserved to Bernardo, other witnesses testified that there were at least two other springs nearer said house than the one in controversy. Indeed counsel for appellant concedes that on this point the evidence is conflicting, but the point seems to be of little or no importance as to the prescriptive right pleaded by defendants. The fact is, as abundantly appears from the record, that Martin Higuera and the successive owners of lot 4 continued to use the water flowing from said spring through said pipe openly and with full knowledge of plaintiff and of all persons in interest. It is claimed, however, that the use has not been uninterrupted, and has not been adverse. But upon these points we think the evidence was of such a nature as to warrant the court in finding that for more than five years before the commencement of the action the use had been continuous and adverse. While the evidence shows that there was a stopcock in the pipe near the spring, no witness was produced that ever turned off the water, either by the stopcock or by any other means. There was no cock or other means of stopping the flow of the water at the outlet of the pipe on lot 4. The plaintiff was himself a witness, and his testimony as to any stopping of the flow of water through the pipe is not at all clear or satisfactory. He testified that the portion of lot 7 where the spring in question is situated has been in the actual possession of his tenant, Mrs. Mesa. On his direct examination he said that there is a stopcock in the pipe near the spring, and it would stop the flow of the water when it was turned, but he did not say that it had ever been turned. He did say that Mrs. Mesa had been using the water to irrigate 9 or 10 acres of lot 7, but on his cross-examination he said that the water used by Mrs. Mesa for irrigation was the overflow, "the water used for irrigating lot seven is where Mrs. Mesa lives. It is an overflow when the pipe is full. Q. Just what escapes from the overflow when the spring is full? A. Yes, sir." Continuing, he said: "This water runs continuously, and has not been stopped off since the pipe was put in. Was used by my mother for the purpose of getting water for family use in the house." On redirect examination he modified what he had said about the water running through the pipe continuously, and said: "When Mrs. Mesa and I wanted water for that 9 or 10 acres we would stop it. We let the water run until we wanted to use it, and then would shut it off." But on recross-examination he said: "I did not stop the water off. My tenant, Mrs. Mesa, stopped it. Q. How do you know that Mrs. Mesa stopped it? A. Well, they told me they wanted the water there to irrigate." Mrs. Mesa was not called as a witness, nor was any one else who ever stopped the flow of water through the pipe. One Flavio Sargarda was also a witness for plaintiff, and appears to have been on the premises (lot 4) and in charge thereof for the owners (Severances) for two years and over immediately preceding the purchase thereof by defendants. Although it appears that plaintiff once spoke to him about the water while the Severances owned the premises (lot 4) and wanted to stop the water, he did not stop it.

Evidence was also given by the defendants to the effect that after their purchase of lot 4 plaintiff applied to them to put in a faucet at the house on lot 4 so that so much water would not be wasted. He asked it as a favor to Mrs. Mesa. This seems inconsistent with his present claim that he had the right to shut off the water from lot 4 at his pleasure.

From the whole record we are of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence to support the finding of the facts supporting a prescriptive right in the owners of lot 4 to the use of the waters that flow through the pipe.

The decree does not award to defendants all the waters of the spring in question, but only such as flows through the pipe.

RIORDAN v. GAS CONSUMERS' ASS'N.

(Civ. 327.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS — MASTER'S LIABILITY — SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

A corporation hired a horse and buggy from a livery stable for the use of its superintendent about the city in the discharge of his duties. The superintendent's regular hours of employment did not include one hour after 12 o'clock each day, which hour was at his own disposal. He was told by the livery stable keeper that the horse might run away unless hitched when standing. The superintendent drove to his home in order to take lunch, and, while the horse was there, between 12 and 1 o'clock, it ran away, as the superintendent was about to feed him, owing to his negligence in failing to hitch it. Held, that the corporation was liable for injuries ensuing to a person in the street from the runaway, as it occurred while the superintendent was in the line of his duty in feeding the horse.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

COOPER, J. This is an appeal prosecuted by the plaintiff from an order granting the defendant a new trial.

The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused through the alleged negligent and careless manner in which a certain horse attached to a buggy was managed by the defendant through its superintendent, Fagan, by reason of which the horse ran away and collided with a buggy in which plaintiff was riding, thereby inflicting upon him the injuries complained of. Plaintiff alleges that on the 11th day of December, 1901, the date upon which the accident happened, the defendant, in the conduct of its business, used and employed a certain horse and buggy; that on said date said horse and buggy were in charge of said Fagan, a servant of the defendant, and were so carelessly and negligently managed and attended to by him that the said horse ran away and collided with the buggy in which plaintiff was seated, throwing him to the ground and thereby causing the injuries complained of. Defendant denies that on the day in question, or at any other time, the defendant, by its servant Fagan, or any other servant, carelessly or negligently managed or attended said horse; denies that at the time the said horse ran away it was in charge of said Fagan as a servant of the defendant, or that at that time said Fagan was its servant; and further denies that said horse, at the time it ran away, was in charge of the defendant, or any of its servants. The action was tried before a jury, who rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $3,500. Thereafter a motion for new trial was made by defendant, and granted by the court below, "upon the sole ground that the court committed error upon the trial of said action in denying the motion made by said defendant for a nonsuit therein, in this: that Fagan, through whose negligence plaintiff sustained his injuries, was not, at the time the horse in his charge ran away, in the defendant's employ, was not at that time engaged in carrying out his employer's business, and was not acting within the scope of his authority, and upon no other ground; and as to all other grounds upon which said motion for a new trial was made by the said defendant the said motion is denied."

This appeal presents the sole question as to whether or not Fagan was acting within the general scope of his authority at the time he allowed the horse to escape. We must presume from the record that the horse ran away by reason of the negligence of Fagan; that the injury to plaintiff was the result of such negligence; that the verdict of the jury is not excessive; and that no errors of law occurred during the trial. It then becomes necessary to state briefly the substance of the evidence and the question presented for decision. At the time the accident occurred the defendant was, and for several years prior thereto had been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling a regulator to be used by the consumers of gas, having its principal place of business at the northeast corner of Post and Powell streets, in the city of San Francisco, and Fagan was at said time, and for several years prior thereto had been, in the employ of defendant as superintendent of its department of construction, having power to employ and discharge men. His regular hours of employment as such superintendent were from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, during which time he was allowed from 12 o'clock m. to 1 o'clock p. m. to obtain and eat his lunch, which hour was at his own disposal. Some time prior to the accident the defendant, through its superintendent, Fagan, hired the horse and buggy from the livery stable of Holland and Kendall for the exclusive use of Fagan. The horse was known as the "superintendent's horse," and used almost exclusively by him. At the time Fagan hired the horse he was informed by the proprietors of the stable that he would have to be very careful with the horse because he would not stand without being hitched, and that it would be necessary to tie the horse at every place he stopped; at the same time a weight and hitching rope were supplied and placed in the buggy. Afterwards, at the request of Fagan, the proprietors of the stable furnished feed and a feed bag so that the horse might be fed at the noon hour. At the time the feed bag was given to the boy who was sent by Fagan for the horse, the boy was told to feed the horse with the bridle on and not to take it off. The residence of Fagan was on Turk street, some distance from the defendant's office, and it was his custom to take his lunch at his home, and, for the purpose of going and returning from his home, he used the horse and buggy, of which he had exclusive charge, with the knowledge and consent of defendant. A young man by the name of Arnold, who was in the employ of defendant, would usually call at the livery stable about 7 o'clock in the morning for the horse and drive it from the stable to Fagan's residence and leave it. Fagan would then, at his convenience, get into the buggy and drive the horse to defendant's office or other place of business where he desired to go. When Fagan's day's work was over he would drive the horse to his home, when it would be again taken charge of by Arnold, and returned to the livery stable about half past 6 o'clock. Fagan, as the superintendent of defendant, was intrusted with the care of the horse from the time it was left at his house in the morning until it was taken away by Arnold in the afternoon. No one else was intrusted with the horse, or given any directions as to its care and custody. If any one else used the horse and buggy during business hours they had first to obtain the consent of Fagan. Defendant never objected in any way or manner to Fagan using the horse and buggy to go to his lunch at the noon hour. On the day of the accident Fagan had been engaged in defendant's business at the Mill's building on Montgomery street, and about 12 o'clock, or a little after, he unhitched the horse from where it had been standing in front of defendant's office, got into the buggy and drove to his place of residence. He did this for the sole purpose of getting his luncheon. He arrived home at about a quarter past 12 o'clock, took the bridle off the horse's head before he had tied him, and, while getting the feed bag, or while about to adjust the feed bag, the horse, finding himself free, ran away, and hence the injuries to plaintiff.

Upon the above facts, we are of opinion that the defendant is liable, and the fact that the act of negligence was committed during the noon hour under the circumstances of this case does not relieve the defendant from responsibility. The rule is that the master is civilly liable for the negligent acts of the servant committed while in his service and within the scope of his employment; that is, the transaction of the master's business. It is also the rule that, when a servant acts independently, without any reference to the service for which he is employed, and not for the purpose of performing the work of his employer, but to effect some independent purpose of his own, the master is not responsible for the negligence of the servant. These rules are well understood by the profession, but, like many other simple and plain rules, their application to the facts is sometimes very difficult. There are hundreds of cases in which the facts show the case to be on the border line, and some of them so close that the decision is at best an approximation. The question, generally, is whether the servant, at the very time of the alleged act of negligence, had departed from his employment, or whether he departed from or neglected a duty in the line of his employment. In the first case the principal is not responsible for the servant's acts, and in the second case he is responsible. The defendant took the exclusive charge of the horse from the time it left the stable until it was returned at night. The stable keepers had instrusted the defendant with its care and safekeeping. They had instructed defendant's servants to be careful with the horse, and not to take the bridle off when feeding it. It was, therefore, the duty of defendant to take such care of the horse as a reasonably prudent person would do under similar circumstances. It being the duty of defendant to care for the horse, that duty could only be performed by some person in defendant's employ. It was the duty of defendant to take care of the horse during the noon hour. Fagan could have delegated this duty to any one in the employ of defendant, or perhaps he could have left the horse in the stable during the noon hour, but he did not do either, but took charge of the horse himself. He, being the superintendent of defendant, took upon himself the care of the horse during the noon hour. If he had employed Arnold, or any other person, to take charge of the horse during such hour, and the negligent act had been done by such person, the defendant would be responsible. It is none the less so because done by the superintendent. It was the duty of Fagan, in the line of this employment, to care for the horse and feed it. He was the superintendent of defendant during the noon hour as well as during business hours. He could not depart from his duty of caring for the horse during the noon hour. He had not departed from his employment. He had not gone off on an independent mission of his own, but in feeding the horse was in the performance of a duty in the line of his employment. To hold otherwise would be to hold that, if the acts had occurred in precisely the same manner they did a minute before 12 o'clock, or a minute after 1 o'clock, the defendant would be liable, but would not be liable between 12 o'clock m. and 1 o'clock p. m. The young man, Arnold, probably had the same business hours as Fagan, yet, according to the respondent's theory, it would not have been responsible if the acts had occurred after 7 o'clock and before 8 o'clock a. m. while Arnold had charge of the horse, driving it to the residence of Fagan. Arnold had charge of the horse for defendant before and after the regular working hours. Fagan had charge of the horse for defendant in the vacation hour between the regular working hours.

The conclusion we have reached finds support in the authorities. In the case of Whitman v. Pearson, Law Journal Reports, vol. 37, p. 156, part 2, it appeared that the defendant was a contractor engaged in making a sewer for the vestry of G; one of his men, who was employed to take care of a horse and cart, and who had no right to go home to dinner or leave the horse and cart, took them to his house and left them outside whilst he was having his dinner; the horse ran away and damaged the plaintiff's railings. A verdict having resulted in favor of plaintiff, a motion for new trial was argued before the Justices. The Chief Justice, in sustaining the verdict, said: "With respect to the first point, the jury have found that the servant was acting in his employment, and I think there was sufficient evidence to warrant them in so doing. * * * Here the servant was employed to take care of the horse and cart, and was engaged in taking care of them when the mischief arose." In Sleath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607, the defendant contended that, at the time of the accident, the horse and carriage were being improperly used by the servant for purposes of his own, and that he was at the time not acting within the scope of his employment. The court held otherwise, and Mr. Justice Erskine said: "It is quite clear that, if a servant without his master's knowledge takes his master's carriage out of the coach house, and with it commits an injury, the master is not answerable; and on this ground: that the master has not intrusted the servant with the carriage. But whenever the master has intrusted the servant with the control of the carriage, it is no answer that the servant acted improperly in the management of it. If it were, it might be contended that, if a master directs his servant to drive slowly, and the servant disobeys his orders and drives fast, and through his negligence occasions an injury, the master will not be liable. But that is not the law; the master in such case will be liable, and the ground is that he has put it in the servant's power to mismanage the carriage by intrusting him with it." In Noblesville, etc., Co. v. Gause, 76 Ind. 142, 40 Am. Rep. 224, the defendant contended that it was not responsible for the negligent act of the tollgate keeper in letting down the beam of the gate after 9 o'clock p. m. because his hours of employment were from 5 o'clock a. m. until 9 o'clock p. m. The court held otherwise, and in the opinion said: "There was, however, uncontradicted evidence showing that the gatekeeper was in sole charge of the toll house and gate at all times, and that he was the only agent or officer of the corporation who had control of that property. * * * It is very apparent in this case that the servant's duty did not terminate with gathering each day's toll, but that it extended to the control of the gate and its appliances, and if, while managing them for the master, he negligently inflicted an injury upon a traveler, who was free from fault, the rule of respondeat superior must prevail." In speaking of the liability of a defendant for the negligence of a driver while engaged in carrying a load of poles for himself the court said, in Mulvehill v. Bates, 31 Minn. 364, 17 N. W. 959, 49 Am. Rep. 796: "But here the wagon was intrusted, generally, to the driver, to be used entirely at his discretion." In Rahm v. Singer Mfg. Co., (C. C.) 26 Fed. 913, the court said: "In order to fix the responsibility of the defendant, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the servant, for whose tort he seeks damages, was, at the time of the commission of the tort, engaged in executing specific commands of the defendant. It is enough for him to prove that the servant was acting within the general scope of his employment, but this much is necessary. If the usage of the parties, under the servant's contract of hiring, was of such a character that it allowed the servant to attend to his duties on such terms as suited his convenience, and at the time of the commission of the tort he was engaged in his own private business, but at the same time was pursuing the defendant's business in the service for which he was employed, the defendant would still be liable."

In the case at bar Fagan was taking his noon hour for rest and refreshment, but at the same time he was pursuing the line of his duty and the defendant's business in caring for and feeding the horse.

LEIST v. DIERSSEN et al. (Civ. 302.)

1. TRIAL — FINDINGS BY COURT — CONSTRUCTION.

Findings by the court must be construed so as to uphold rather than defeat the judgment rendered thereon, and, for the purpose of supporting the judgment, they must be liberally construed, and any ambiguity must be resolved in favor of the judgment.

2. SAME.

For the purpose of resolving an ambiguity in a finding by the court so as to support the judgment, reference may be had to other findings, to the issues, and to the bill of exceptions containing the evidence.

3. SAME.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy for the value of chattels sold by the bankrupt, defendant, in his answer, denied that the bankrupt was the owner of the property, and alleged that the bankrupt had transferred the same to a third person, and annexed a copy of the bill of sale executed by the bankrupt to defendant which did not include a leasehold interest owned by the bankrupt. The bankrupt was the owner of a bakery and restaurant, together with a leasehold interest in the premises where the business was conducted and the furniture contained therein and the good will of the business. There was no evidence of the value of the leasehold interest. The bankrupt testified that the good will of the business was worth $3,000, and that the stock and fixtures were worth about $500. Held, that a finding that the bankrupt was the owner of the business together with a leasehold interest of the premises and the furniture contained therein and the good will of the business, and that the bankrupt sold the property "last herein described" to defendant, and that the reasonable value of the property so sold was $3,500, when construed in connection with the facts was a finding that the bankrupt sold the good will of his business and the furniture used in connection therewith, but did not sell his leasehold interest.

4. SALES—TRANSFER OF TITLE—VALUE NOT DETERMINED.

The execution by a seller of a bill of sale of chattels and the delivery of the chattels to the buyer vests the title in the buyer though the value of the chattels was not agreed on, for, in the absence of an agreement as to the value or the mode of ascertaining the same, the buyer is liable to an action for the value of the chattels.

5. BANKRUPTCY—ASSETS—RECOVERY BY TRUSTEE.

Where a seller, after the delivery of chattels sold to the buyer without an agreement as to the price and before the price was ascertained, was adjudged a bankrupt, the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to enforce the obligation of the buyer to pay the value of the chattels.

6. SAME.

The right of a trustee in bankruptcy to recover the value of chattels sold by the bankrupt without an agreement between him and the buyer as to the price is not affected by the fact that the bankrupt included the chattels in his schedule in bankruptcy, or by his omitting to name the obligation of the buyer to him to pay the value of the chattels as to part of his assets.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Charles J. Leist, trustee in bankruptcy of F. Siebrecht, against John Dierssen and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Pippy & Bahrs and F. J. & T. C. Castelhun, for appellants. G. H. Perry, for respondent.

HARRISON, P. J. Appeal from a judgment against the defendants for the value of certain personal property sold and delivered to them.

March 2, 1902, F. Siebrecht was the proprietor of, and engaged in conducting, the business of a restaurant and bakery in San Francisco, and was also the owner of a leasehold interest in the premises upon which the business was being conducted. He was at that time heavily indebted, and a few days before had made an assignment to the plaintiff, Leist, of the restaurant and the property connected therewith, and also an assignment to him of the said leasehold interest. These assignments were made merely by way of security for his creditors, and he continued to remain in the possession of the property and to carry on the business thereof. Leist thereafter, acting in behalf of his creditors and with his approval, had certain negotiations with the defendants herein for the sale to them of the said business, together with its good will and the said leasehold interest. While these negotiations were going on, all of the parties thereto became anxious lest the creditors of Siebrecht should levy an attachment upon the property and prevent its sale to the defendants, and on March 2d Siebrecht executed and delivered to the defendants a bill of sale of the restaurant and restaurant business, together with the good will thereof, and all the personal property contained therein and used in connection therewith, and thereupon gave them the possession of the same, which they still retain. The bill of sale expresses as the consideration therefor the sum of $10, but no valuation of the property or price for the sale was agreed upon between the parties. On the next day, when the defendants went to the place, the men who had been employed by Siebrecht expressed themselves as dissatisfied at not receiving their pay, and the place was closed to the public. March 5th Siebrecht filed his petition in bankruptcy, and on March 21st Leist was appointed by the court trustee of his estate.

At the trial herein the superior court found: "That on the 2d day of March, 1902, one F. Siebrecht was the owner of, in the possession of, and conducting and managing the business commonly known as 'Engleberg's Bakery and Restaurant,' at and in the premises Nos. 416 and 418 Kearny street in the city and county of San Francisco, together with the leasehold interest of the aforesaid premises, and the furniture contained in said premises and the good will of said business. That on or about said 2d day of March, 1902, said F. Siebrecht sold and delivered the property last herein described to the defendants John Dierssen and William Gropp. That the reasonable value of the property so as aforesaid sold and delivered was and is $3,500."

These findings are specified by the defendants as unsustained by the evidence, and, in support of their exception, they contend that there was no evidence that the leasehold interest was assigned to the defendants, or that the reasonable value of the property sold and delivered was worth $3,500. This exception by the defendants, and their argument thereon as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, rests upon a misconception by them of the language used by the court. In the first of the above findings the court designates the property of which it finds that Siebrecht was the proprietor on March 2d, and in enumerating the property gives the business commonly known as "Engleberg's Bakery" (with its location on Kearny street) and a leasehold interest in said premises, "and the furniture contained in said premises and the good will of said business," thus specifying the furniture and the good will as distinct species of said property; and in the succeeding finding finds that on that day Siebrecht sold to the defendants the property "last herein described." The use of this phrase clearly indicates that the court did not intend to find that the sale to the defendants included all of the property described in the previous finding, but only such portion as was included in the term "last herein described," and, while the finding is not entirely free from ambiguity, it is not for that reason to be so construed as to defeat the judgment rendered thereon. Findings are always to receive such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment rendered upon them, and, for the purpose of supporting the judgment, are to be liberally construed, and any ambiguity therein is to be resolved in favor of sustaining the judgment. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 66 Pac. 309; People's Home Savings Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 73 Pac. 858. For the purpose of resolving any ambiguity therein, reference may be had to other findings of fact, and also to the issues which were before the court, and to the bill of exceptions containing the evidence upon those issues.

In their answer to the complaint the defendants denied that at the date of the bill of sale from Siebrecht to them he was the owner of any of the property named in the complaint—the same as that set forth in the first of the above findings—and alleged that prior thereto he had sold and transferred the said property to Leist, and that Leist was then the owner thereof. They also alleged that on that day Siebrecht executed to them a bill of sale of certain of said property—annexing a copy of this bill of sale to their answer—and that the leasehold interest was not included therein, and had never been transferred to them. Siebrecht's ownership of the property described in the findings was, therefore, a distinct issue from that of his ownership of the property which he had conveyed to them, and the different findings of the court are to be construed as referable to these distinct issues.

Upon the issue of Siebrecht's ownership the court found against the contention of the defendants, and upon the issue of their purchase of the property it found in accordance with the terms of the bill of sale annexed to their answer. There was no evidence offered upon this issue other than this bill of sale and the circumstances attending its execution and delivery, and it is, therefore, evident that, in its finding upon the issue of what property was sold by Siebrecht to the defendants, the court, by using the phrase "last herein described" did not intend to include the leasehold interest mentioned in the previous finding. This conclusion is corroborated by the finding of the court that the value of the property "so sold and delivered" was $3,500. There was no evidence of the value of the leasehold interest before the court, but Siebrecht testified that the good will of the business was worth $3,000, and that the stock and fixtures and other personal property was worth about $500 or $600. The finding of the court that the value of the property "so sold and delivered" was $3,500, relates to the property intended by the phrase "last herein described," and, being based solely upon evidence of the value of other property than the leasehold interest, confirms the conclusion that the court did not intend to include that interest as a portion of the property sold to the defendants.

By the execution of the bill of sale and the delivery of the property to the defendants the title thereto vested in them, and they became under an obligation to Siebrecht for its value. It was not necessary that its value should be ascertained and agreed upon before the sale could take effect. Property may be transferred by way of sale and delivery from its owner to another upon an agreement that the compensation to be paid therefor may be subsequently ascertained, and, in the absence of an agreement as to the mode of ascertaining the value, the purchaser will be liable to an action for its value. He cannot retain possession of the property and escape liability therefor upon the ground that its value had not been previously agreed upon. Prior to the commencement of this action, Siebrecht became a bankrupt, and was incompetent to agree upon its value, and the plaintiff herein as his successor became entitled to enforce against the defendants their obligation for its value.

The transaction between Siebrecht and the defendants, or their title to the property thus vested in them, was not affected by the fact that he subsequently included the property in his schedule in bankruptcy, or by his omitting to name their obligation to him as a part of his assets.

DICKIE v. STEIGER. (Civ. 324.)

1. Compromise and Settlement—Vacation—Fraud—Pleading.

Complainant alleged that he was induced to give defendant sole control of the output of lime and cement rock and clay from complainant's land for a term of 20 years, on defendant's representations that he would construct large works on the land, employing hundreds of men, and that complainant's income from the arrangement would be from $7,000 to $12,000 annually; that the representations were false; that defendant had no intention of performing them; that complainant, at the time the contract was made, was 62 years of age, infirm in mind and body, and unable to conduct his business affairs; that the agreement so recorded clouded complainant's title, which prevented a sale, and, in order to complete the sale, complainant was compelled to pay defendant $1,500 to procure a release of the contract, there being no sufficient time to sue to cancel the contract. Held that, in the absence of an allegation as to when defendant's improvements on the land were to be erected under the contract, or as to the time that had elapsed since the contract was made, the complaint was demurrable.

2. Same—Consideration.

A compromise of a doubtful claim and a desire to avoid a lawsuit is a sufficient consideration for the release of the parties' rights with reference to such claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. A. Hosmer, Judge.

Suit by A. A. Dickie against L. A. Steiger. From a judgment in favor of defendant, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. W. Dinkelspiel and E. M. Billings, for appellant. Lent & Humphreys, for respondent.

COOPER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of defendant, by default, plaintiff having declined to amend after an order made sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint. We conclude that the demurrer was properly sustained. The complaint states that plaintiff, being the owner of the premises described therein, in which were large and valuable deposits of lime or cement rock and clay, suitable for use in making Portland cement, entered into a contract in writing with defendant on the 5th day of November, 1900, whereby the defendant was given sole control of the entire output of said lime or cement rock and clay for the term of 20 years upon certain terms and conditions, which are not fully stated, but by which the plaintiff was to derive an income from a share of the profit of the said products of said land; that the contract was recorded with the county recorder of the county in which the land is situated and thus clouds the plaintiff's title; that defendant obtained the said contract by representing to the plaintiff that he and his associates were possessed of large means and desired to and would erect large factories thereon and employ hundreds of men, and that plaintiff's income under the arrangement would be the annual sum of from $7,000 to $12,000; that said representations and promises were false, and made with the intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, and with no intention on the part of defendant of performing them; that plaintiff at the time of entering into said contract was 62 years of age, infirm in mind and body, and unable to properly conduct his business affairs; that plaintiff afterwards found a purchaser for said property who was ready, able, and willing to purchase the same, but that the said agreement, so recorded, clouded plaintiff's title, and thus prevented a sale, and that defendant refused to release the plaintiff from said agreement; that, because of plaintiff's necessities and the fear of losing the contemplated purchaser, the plaintiff did not have time to bring a suit in the ordinary course to cancel said contract and remove the cloud from said title, and he was compelled to pay and did pay to defendant the sum of $1,500 to procure a release of said contract so that the sale might be consummated. Judgment was prayed for $12,000 damages, for general relief, and for costs.

While the complaint alleges that defendant did not perform his part of the contract and did not erect the factories and make the improvements he agreed to make, there is no allegation as to the time that had elapsed after the contract was made. In fact, the complaint wholly fails to state when such improvement or factories were to be erected. It is not even alleged that the improvements were to commence within a reasonable time, or that a reasonable time had elapsed. It may be true, so far as the complaint informs us, that the contemplated sale, under which the $1,500 was paid to obtain a release, and the payment of the $1,500, were made the day or the week after the contract had been made and recorded. Plaintiff alleges that, when the contract was made, he was unable to properly conduct his business affairs. The same might be said of the great majority of men. It is because of such fact that some men become wealthy, while others are always poor. It is not, however, alleged that at the time plaintiff paid the defendant the $1,500 and procured a release of the 20-year contract he was feeble in mind or unable to properly conduct his business affairs.

Without regard to the question as to the right the plaintiff might have had to come into a court of equity and obtain a decree canceling the contract which had been placed of record, he cannot, upon the allegations of his complaint, maintain this action. Defendant apparently had valuable rights under a contract in writing in regard to real estate running for 20 years. He had at least the right to claim that the contract was valid, executed upon sufficient consideration, and not obtained by any false or fraudulent representations. All these rights he surrendered in consideration of the $1,500 paid to him by plaintiff. Plaintiff now seeks to recover back the sum so paid without restoring to defendant the rights he released. It may be that the value of the contract to defendant was worth more than $1,500 and that, to avoid litigation and any appearance of wronging an old man, defendant concluded to compromise for the $1,500. It is the policy of the law to discourage litigation and to favor compromises and voluntary settlements. The compromise of a doubtful claim is usually valid and the mutual release of their respective rights by the parties to the controversy, and the desire to avoid a suit at law, are a sufficient consideration for such compromise. Courts cannot measure the mental capacity of every person who enters into a business transaction. There is as much difference in the mental capacities of parties to make contracts or enter into business transactions as in their weight, height, or features. There is not even an attempt made to allege that the plaintiff did not fully understand and know what he was doing when he paid the $1,500 and procured the release of the contract from defendant.

NEALE v. MORROW. (S. F. 4,008.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1907.)

BILLS AND NOTES—ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS.

Act April 2, 1866 (St. 1865–66, p. 752, c. 546), providing for the incorporation of mutual insurance companies, provided that no company formed under the statute should write any insurance until it should have obtained a fund, to be known as the "Guaranty Fund," consisting of notes of solvent persons. It was provided that such notes were to be payable absolutely, and be negotiable and payable at such times as the directors should direct and that they should remain with the company until the net earnings of the company should have accumulated to a sum, which, with the capital stock, would be equal to the original amount of the guaranty fund and of the capital stock, and that, when such fund was attained, the notes remaining in the company's control should be surrendered. One of the notes provided that, five days after actual demand, the maker would pay, etc., and in an action on the note it was contended that the note was within the general rule that, where a demand is necessary to perfect a right of action on a note, and to set the statute of limitations in motion, such demand must be made within a reasonable time, not exceeding the statute of limitations provided for bringing such action, after the cause of action has accrued. Held, that the contention was untenable, and limitations commenced to run against the note after actual demand for payment made prior to the obtaining of the capital referred to in the statute; the note being a continuing security unaffected by any mere lapse of time before actual demand.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Vincent Neale, as special administrator of the estate of James Laidley, deceased, against Robert H. Morrow, administrator of the estate of A. E. Head, deceased. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to overrule a demurrer to the complaint and to allow defendant to answer.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of defendant after an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint was entered. The action is founded on a promissory note made by A. E. Head, against whom the action was originally commenced, but who having thereafter died, the respondent as his administrator was substituted as defendant. It appears from the allegations of the complaint, necessary to be stated in order to discuss the point involved on this appeal: That said note was executed by said A. E. Head on January 6, 1868, and is as follows:

"$5,000. San Francisco, January 6th, 1868.

"Five days after actual demand, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of the California Mutual Life Insurance Company the sum of five thousand dollars, in U. S. gold coin, with interest at the then legal rate from and after such demand.

"A. E. Head."

That upon its execution said note was delivered to the said California Mutual Life Insurance Company. That said California Mutual Life Insurance Company was incorporated in the year 1867 under an act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of mutual insurance companies for the insurance of life and health and against accidents," approved April 2, 1866 (St. 1865–66, p. 752, c. 546). That, in pursuance of the requirements of sections 8 and 9 of said act, the company had a capital stock fully paid up in cash of $100,000, and it also had a guaranty fund of $250,000, consisting of 50 promissory notes of solvent persons for $5,000 each, payable in five days after actual demand, to said company or its order. That said A. E. Head was one of such notemakers, and the note herein sued on was one of such guaranty notes. That all said notes were executed and delivered in pursuance to the provisions of said act. That, after obtaining said guaranty fund, the company commenced to prosecute the business of life insurance. That the net earnings of the company never accumulated in cash or securities in which the net earnings were invested to the sum of $350,000. That said company made no profits and never acquired any net earnings over the amount required for paying and providing for its expenses, losses, and liabilities. That said guaranty fund never became discharged of its obligations. That in 1885 said life insurance company was declared insolvent, and upon proceedings had to that end it was by the court decreed, among other things, that said note of A. E. Head was an asset of said insolvent company, and directed it to be sold. That pursuant to said decree said note was sold to J. H. Dobinson, the agent of a syndicate of guaranty note makers who co-operated together to provide means to wind up said insurance company and liquidate its indebtedness. That said note of said Head was under direction of said syndicate transferred to the executors of the estate of one James Laidley, deceased, in settlement and extinguishment of a claim of $8,400 against the said insolvent corporation by the estate of said Laidley arising out of a policy of $10,000 issued by said insurance company payable on the death of said Laidley. That on the 22d day of September, 1888, payment of said note was actually demanded of said Head by the executors of said estate, and upon his refusal to pay this action was commenced September 28, 1888, and is now being prosecuted in behalf of said estate. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the cause of action on said note was barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer was sustained by the superior court, and the validity of said order is the only point presented on this appeal from the judgment.

This case was here on appeal before (Neale v. Head, 133 Cal. 42, 65 Pac. 131, 576), after trial and judgment for the plaintiff. On that appeal it was urged, among other grounds for reversal, that the claim upon said note was barred by the statute of limitations; but, the case being reversed on other grounds, no disposition of that point was made. It is claimed by respondent, in support of the ruling of the lower court, that the general rule is, where a demand is necessary to perfect a right of action upon a promissory note payable on demand and to set the statute of limitations in motion, that such demand must be made within a reasonable time, which in no event can exceed the statute of limitations provided for bringing said action after the cause of action has accrued, and that, if such demand is delayed beyond that period, the right of action is forever barred. And applying the rule to the note at bar, it is insisted that, as such note provided for payment "after demand," such demand should have been made within the four-year period of limitation, and, not having been so made, the cause of action upon the note was barred when the complaint in this action was filed 16 years after the latest period for making such demand existed. Conceding this to be the general rule, it has only been applied in cases where the notes in question have been made payable at a given period "after demand." We have been pointed to no authority which has held that this rule is applicable to notes payable within a certain period "after actual demand." In fact, our attention has not been directed to any case where the language used in the note before us has ever come up for consideration or interpretation. The general rule of limitations asserted by respondent as applicable to the note at bar is formulated by the decisions supporting it in cases where a note is payable so many days "after demand" upon a presumption from lapse of time that a demand was made. But, certainly, as a matter of simple contract, the maker of a note could contract so that the maturity of his note payable so many days after demand should not be determined by presumption of law that a demand was made, but that it should only mature after actual demand—a demand in fact as contradistinguished from a presumptive one. And that this was the intention of the parties we think is apparent not only from the language used in the note, but from the situation of the contracting parties and the circumstances attending its making and delivery. It is a cardinal rule that in the interpretation of a contract every word used therein is to be given its full meaning and effect. And, in the construction of a written instrument in order to ascertain what was meant by the language used, the object in view and the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument are properly to be taken into consideration for that purpose.

Now, considering the situation and circumstances under which this note was executed: It was one of a number required to be given to the California Mutual Life Insurance Company in order to constitute a guaranty fund as required by the act under which the company was organized. It was given pursuant to the terms of the act, and the provision of the act, in as far as they bear upon such note, must be considered as written into the note itself. Neale v. Head, 133 Cal. 43–45, 65 Pac. 131, 576. Referring now to such provisions: The act provided that every company formed under it should have a capital stock of not less than $100,000, was prohibited from making any insurance until said amount was fully paid up in cash and until after it should have obtained a fund to be known as the guaranty fund of not less than $250,000, consisting of the promissory notes of solvent persons approved by its board of directors and by each other note-giver; no note of any one person to exceed $5,000. Such notes were payable to the company, or its order, and at such time or times, in such modes and in such sums, and with or without interest, as the board of directors should prescribe. Such notes were to be payable absolutely, and at all events at the company's option, were negotiable, and might be indorsed and transferred or converted into cash, or otherwise dealt with by the company at its discretion, without reference to any contingency of losses, expense, or otherwise. It was provided that such notes, or the proceeds thereof, should remain with the company as a fund for the better security of its dealers, should be assets of the company liable for all its debts, obligations, and indebtedness next after its assets from premiums and other sources, exclusive of capital stock, until the net earnings of the company, over and above its expenses, losses, and liabilities, should have accumulated, in cash or securities in which the net earnings had been invested, to a sum which, with the capital stock, would be equal to the original amounts of the guaranty fund and of the capital stock, and that thereupon the said sum of the capital stock should become and remain the fixed capital of the company, etc. It was further provided that when this fixed capital was attained all notes of the fund remaining in the company's control should be surrendered to the makers thereof, respectively, or other parties entitled to receive the same, but that until such time no guaranty note should be withdrawn from the fund, unless another note of equal solvency should be substituted therefor, and not then unless with the unanimous approval of the board of directors then in office, and of all the other parties liable on the rest of the notes comprising the guaranty fund. It was also provided that the company should allow a commission of 5 per cent. per annum on all such guaranty notes while outstanding, and also interest on all moneys paid on such notes by the parties liable thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum until repaid by the company. As we say, it was under the provisions of this act, and for the purpose of assisting in creating the guaranty fund thereby required, that the note in controversy was given.

Now, we think it clear when these provisions of the act are carefully considered that, if we assume, as is contended by counsel for respondent, that the language of the note making it payable "after actual demand," is of no more legal force than if it read simply "after demand," still, even so construing the note, the act itself provides within what time such demand may be exercised, which is at any time prior to the acquisition by the company of a fixed capital. This act is of equal dignity with the general statute of limitations. The Legislature could have expressly provided that the time within which demand might be made on such guaranty notes might be at any time between the date of their execution and before a fixed capital was obtained by the company. It will not be pretended that, in the face of such a provision in the act, the statute of limitations which would ordinarily apply to notes payable at a given time "after demand" would apply to a note so payable given under the provisions of the act in question. But, while the act contains no direct provision, such as we have suggested might have been inserted in it, still it is obvious, when we consider the general scope and purpose of requiring these notes and the provisions relative to them, that this was what was contemplated and intended by providing that these guaranty notes should be payable at the option of the company. Under the act it was intended that these notes should constitute a continuing guaranty fund which should remain intact for the protection of the policy holders and other creditors of the company until a fixed capital was acquired, when the makers were to be relieved from responsibility and the note surrendered. Until that time it was intended that the fund as represented by these notes (unless at the option of the company previous payment on them should be required) should constitute an inviolable fund to be resorted to when necessary to pay any claims, payment of which they were executed to secure. There is nothing in the statute requiring the company to sue upon them every four years, nor any provision requiring that they should be renewed within that period. Under the act no duty is imposed upon the company to have them renewed—replaced by new notes. On the contrary, as indicating that the original notes, as far as any acts of the company are concerned, shall at its option remain in the fund and under the control of the company, it is expressly provided, that, until a fixed capital is acquired, no guaranty note shall be withdrawn from such fund unless another note of equal solvency shall be substituted therefor, and not then unless by unanimous approval of the board of directors and all the other parties liable on the rest of the notes in the fund. This provision evidently was intended to apply in cases where a guarantor of the fund desired to substitute another guarantor in his place, and is the only way provided in which release, prior to the acquirement of a fixed capital, could be obtained by any guarantor from his continuing guaranty. In this regard it may be suggested, too, that as the purpose to be attained by requiring these guarantied notes to be made was to protect the policy holders and other creditors until the fixed capital was attained, this protection could be best afforded by providing that the notes should be a continuing guaranty until that time, rather than to require them to be renewed, or sued on, every four years, matters which the directors of the company might, to the injury of the fund, neglect to do. Neither could anything be attained by suing upon these notes every four years. All that could be accomplished would be to convert good securities into cash, and thereby substitute a guaranty cash fund for a guaranty note one; and this to the disadvantage of the company, because, while it was paying but 5 per cent. commissions per annum on the notes under the act, it would be paying under the same act 12 per cent. interest to the makers of them on the money collected, and might so have to do for possibly many years before the guaranty fund would be required for any purpose, if it would be required at all. The act certainly contemplated nothing of this kind. In fact, it contemplated that this guaranty note fund might never be called on, and that it would ultimately be relieved by the attainment of a fixed capital, at which time the notes themselves would be surrendered. When a fixed capital, which would relieve these notes, could be attained, would necessarily be problematical. It might be accomplished in a few years, or it might take many years to do so, or it might not be achieved at all. It might also take many years before any necessity would arise for calling on the guaranty fund at all. The liability of the company, considering the nature of its business, would principally be for death losses, any great number of which could not reasonably be anticipated for many years subsequent to the execution of these notes, or such as did occur might be paid from other resources of the company without calling on the guaranty note fund. In contemplation of the uncertainty as to the time when this guaranty fund might be required, if at all, as it was to be created for the benefit mainly of policy holders whose claims might not accrue for many years, it was intended by the act that these guaranty notes should constitute a continuing guaranty fund; such notes to be payable at the option of the company to be exercised at any time prior to the establishment of a fixed capital provided for in the act.

As these notes must be construed in the light of these provisions, it follows, as the act conferred upon the company the option of demanding payment of them at any time before a fixed capital was required, that, when the note in question was executed providing for payment after demand, it was intended by the parties that such demand might be exercised by the company at any time prior to the acquirement of a fixed capital. The terms used in the note were inserted in harmony with the provisions of the act so that the option there given to the company might be exercised at its pleasure at any time prior to that event. In this regard the act, as the Legislature had a right to provide, furnished its own provision when the statute of limitations should commence to run against these guaranty notes, which was after demand for payment made prior to obtaining such capital. Until such demand the statute of limitations could not operate. Under this view, as the company had not acquired a fixed capital when demand was made on the note at bar, the statute of limitations had not run when this action was commenced. Aside, however, from a consideration of the terms of the note, under the provisions of the act requiring its execution and declaring the purpose and effect thereof, we are satisfied that, under the rule for interpreting contracts, which requires full force and effect to be given to every word used therein with a view of determining the meaning and intention of the parties, that the statute of limitations would not commence to run until demand in fact—an actual demand—was made for payment of the note.

It is claimed by respondent that the word "demand" implies itself an actual demand, and hence the word "actual" may be treated as redundant. Under this contention the word "actual" would have no meaning. It was, however, used by the parties, and we think sufficient reason is apparent why it was used, and used deliberately. It was used not only as characterizing the nature of the demand for payment which should be made, but as determining the time within which interest should begin to run upon the note, because it is provided therein that "five days after actual demand" the principal sum shall be paid "with interest at the then legal rate from and after such demand." And it is readily perceivable why actual demand was provided for. The insurance act required these notes to be payable at the option of the company. It was further provided that these notes might be negotiated by the company; that it might indorse or discount them at any time that it saw fit to do so. When the form of notes to be given under the act was under consideration by the board of directors, it was doubtless then well understood that, when a note was made payable simply "on demand," no demand need be made at all, and that the statute of limitations commenced to run from the date of the note; likewise that, though a demand was necessary to protect a right of action on a note payable so many days "after demand," yet, in order to bind an indorser of such note, such demand must be made within a reasonable time. They knew also that as to the payee in such a note the rule contended for here by respondent would apply, namely, that from the lapse of a reasonable time a demand would be presumed; such reasonable time usually being determined by the analogy of the statute of limitations. With a knowledge of the law as applied to these forms of notes, the corporation doubtless wished to avoid its application by providing a different form. With this end in view, the word "actual" was used. By using it both the maker and the payee intended that neither the rule that a note payable "on demand" was payable immediately, nor that, to bind an indorser on a note payable after demand, the demand should be made within a reasonable time, should apply as to these notes. As the insurance act provided that these notes should be negotiable, it was intended to secure the freest negotiability at any time the company might desire to negotiate them. It was contemplated that, at any time before a fixed capital was achieved, they might be readily convertible into money. This ready negotiability could be best attained by making the notes payable at a given period after "actual damand," because as an indorser the company would then be liable to the holder until he chose to make actual demand for payment, without any question possibly arising as to whether the demand was, or was not, made within a reasonable time.

It was also intended by this form of note requiring "actual demand" to prevent, as to the payee, the indulgence of any presumption of demand from lapse of time. In effect, by the use of the word "actual," as distinguished from the word "presumed," it was intended by the parties as to these notes that no presumption of demand having been made on it should be indulged in; that it was to be continuing security which would be unaffected by mere lapse of time before actual demand, and that it should not mature until actual demand for payment of it was made. Under these views the demand made for the payment of this note was in time, the statute of limitations was no bar to the action commenced on it, and the demurrer should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer and allow the defendant to answer.

Ex parte GOLDMAN. (Civ. 199.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS—GROUNDS OF REMEDY—PROCEEDINGS REVIEWABLE — COMMITMENT UNDER INDICTMENT.

A person imprisoned under an indictment which does not charge a public offense may obtain his discharge on an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—PARTIES TO OFFENSES—ACCESSORIES—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Pen. Code, § 32, defining accessories as those who after knowledge of the commission of a felony conceal it from the magistrate or protect the person charged with the crime, states the common-law rule that a person must know that he is assisting a felon or else he cannot be charged as an accessory, and the mere neglect to inform the authorities that a felony has been committed is not sufficient, the word "conceal" in the statute including some affirmative act on the part of the person looking to the concealment of the felony.

3. OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE—CONCEALING EVIDENCE—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment alleging that accused after and with knowledge that a third person had stolen certain property concealed the property stolen and concealed from the magistrate the commission of the felony, states no offense under Pen. 4. INDICTMENT — REQUISITES — ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Where an act may fall within the definition of several offenses, according to the purpose with which it is done, it is essential to the statement of any offense that the purpose be set forth.

An indictment alleging that accused, after and with knowledge that a third person, had stolen certain property, concealed the property, and concealed from the magistrate the commission of the felony, states no offense under Pen. Code, § 496, punishing the receiving of stolen property.

6. INDICTMENT—ACCESSORIES.

An indictment charging that accused after and with knowledge of the commission of a felony concealed its commission from the magistrate does not charge accused with being an accessory within Pen. Application of Edward Goldman for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

F. G. Ostrander and Frank H. Farrar, for petitioner. E. H. Hoar, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

McLAUGHLIN, J. The petitioner was indicted by the grand jury of the county of Merced for the crime of "being an accessory to the commission of a felony." The particular circumstances of the offense charged are set forth in the indictment as follows: "That said Edward Goldman on or about the 20th day of January, A. D. nineteen hundred and six, * * * (after and with full knowledge that one Ross Dunn theretofore, at, and in said county of Merced, and on or about the 18th day of January, A. D. 1906, had willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously taken, stolen, and carried away from the freight depot of the Southern Pacific Company in the city of Merced, ten sacks of Alfalfa seed of the value of $227.50; * * * and said alfalfa seed being at the time it was so taken, stolen, and carried away the personal property of one W. C. Dallas) did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously conceal the property stolen as aforesaid, and did conceal from the magistrate the commission by said Ross Dunn of said felony."

It is contended in behalf of the petitioner that the indictment does not charge a public offense, and hence that his imprisonment is unlawful. In answer to this contention it is argued (1) that habeas corpus is not the proper proceeding for the determination of the question involved; (2) that the offense is charged in the language of section 32 of the Penal Code, and therefore the indictment is sufficient. It is the settled rule in this state that defects or irregularities in an indictment will only be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, but, if the facts alleged do not constitute a public offense, habeas corpus will lie. In Matter of Corryell, 22 Cal. 183; Ex parte Harrold, 47 Cal. 130; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 479, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; Ex parte Williams, 121 Cal. 331, 53 Pac. 706. Our inquiry in the present proceedings must, therefore, be confined to the single question whether the indictment charges the commission of a public offense. If the indictment only contained the general accusation that the petitioner had committed a felony "by being an accessory to the commission of a felony," it would, undoubtedly, be wholly insufficient and void. This proposition is too plain to require elaboration or citation of authorities. We must, therefore, examine the facts alleged, in order to determine whether the acts or facts detailed constitute the offense designated in the general charge. The attorneys for the people defend the indictment on the ground that 'it sufficiently appears therefrom that the petitioner concealed his knowledge of the commission of the offense of grand larceny from a magistrate. This defense is equivalent to an admission that the prisoner should be discharged. Knowledge of the commission of a felony is, and always has been, necessary to charge a person as an accessory. Intent is an essential element of all crimes, and a person could hardly intend to conceal the commission of a crime, or render assistance to a criminal, when he was wholly ignorant of the commission of an offense or the participation of the person assisted. Hence the language, "after full knowledge that a felony has been committed," found in section 32 of the Penal Code, is but the statement of an essential prerequisite to guilty concealment, protection, or assistance. In other words, it is but a reiteration of the common-law rule that a person must know that he is assisting a criminal, or else he cannot be charged as accessory. While the existence of such knowledge was an essential ingredient of the offense at common law, still the mere neglect to disclose it or inform the authorities that a felony had been committed did not constitute the person maintaining such silence an accessory. Bishop, Criminal Law, vol. 1, § 694; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 1, p. 268; Blackstone Commentaries, p. 37, n. 25, 120. Section 32 of the Penal Code is but a codification of the common-law rule or definition, and hence the Supreme Court of this state has pointedly said: "The word 'conceal,' as here used, means more than a simple withholding of knowledge possessed by a party that a felony has been committed. This concealment necessarily includes the element of some affirmative act upon the part of the person tending to or looking toward the concealment of the felony. Mere silence after knowledge of its commission is not sufficient to constitute the party an accessory." People v. Garnett, 129 Cal. 366, 61 Pac. 1115. An examination of the original record in that case shows that the information contained a statement of the particular affirmative acts constituting the concealment from the magistrate, but did not contain the name of the magistrate. This portion of the information was upheld, and the cause was remanded for a new trial upon that issue. It was in passing upon the sufficiency of the information in this regard that the language quoted was used; and hence the contention that it is obiter dicta cannot be sustained. Viewed as dictum, however, it is sustained by the overwhelming weight of authority in the United States and England, and commends itself to our reason as a correct statement of the law.

Upon first impression it seemed to me that the averment that petitioner concealed the property stolen, with knowledge of the theft, might be sufficient to charge him as an accessory. But this averment is so plainly separated from any charge of concealment that we cannot, even by inference, construe the indictment as charging that the concealment of the property was for the purpose or with the intent to conceal the commission of the crime from the magistrate. The decisions in this state and elsewhere seem to hold that receiving or concealing stolen property constitutes an entirely different offense. Section 496, Pen. Code; People v. Hawkins, 34 Cal. 182; People v. Stakem, 40 Cal. 601; People v. Fagan, 98 Cal. 234, 33 Pac. 60; Bishop, Criminal Law, § 699; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 24, p. 48. Then, too, such concealment might have been for the purpose denounced as criminal in section 135 of the Penal Code. Where an act mala prohibita may fall within the definition of several offenses, according to the purpose with which it is done, it is essential to the statement of any offense that the intent or purpose of the act be set forth. While it was not contended in argument that the indictment could be sustained on the ground just discussed, we have nevertheless examined the point, with the result above indicated. There was and could be no pretense that the petitioner was charged or could be convicted under section 496 of the Penal Code, and hence we pass to the consideration of the vital and most difficult question involved.

The indictment charges that petitioner, after and with full knowledge of the commission of the felony, did conceal its commission from the magistrate, and the question arises whether this bald statement is sufficient to charge petitioner as an accessory. The argument before us clearly indicated that the sole intention was to charge a concealment of the commission of the felony by mere silence or withholding of knowledge from a magistrate. While we would, perhaps, be justified in accepting this construction, which must result in the discharge of the prisoner, we deem it our duty in this kind of a proceeding to determine whether any construction placed upon the language used would support a judgment against the petitioner as accessory to the crime committed by the other party named. In People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 583, 75 Pac. 171, the defendant was charged with an assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury, and the court said: "When, however, the words or terms used in the statute have no technical or precise meaning which of themselves imply the offense, or when the particular facts or acts which shall constitute it are not specified, but from the general language used many things may be done which may constitute an offense, it is then necessary in charging an offense claimed to be embraced within the general language of the statute, to set forth the particular things or acts charged to have been done with reasonable certainty and distinctness, so that the court may determine whether an offense within the statute is charged, or one over which it has jurisdiction."

This rule thus clearly stated has obtained in California for more than 50 years, and, even if we had the right, we would have no inclination to change it. People v. Neil, 91 Cal. 468, 27 Pac. 760; People v. McKenna, 81 Cal. 160, 22 Pac. 488; People v. Washington, 36 Cal. 674; People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 165; People v. Wallace, 9 Cal. 32. To charge a person with murder, robbery, grand larceny, or being accessory to the commission of either crime would obviously be the statement of a legal conclusion. And an averment that a party concealed the commission of an offense is as obviously the statement of a mere abstract legal proposition. The indictment must show on its face the acts or facts from which the conclusion flows. The concealment of a crime "necessarily includes the element of some affirmative act," and the particular affirmative act constituting the offense must be stated in the indictment, to the end that the court and defendant may know, independently of the conclusion stated, that such act constitutes an offense against the law. If this were not so, then it would be sufficient in all cases to charge an offense in the naked language of the statute, and this has never been, is not now, and in reason never can be the law. The wisdom and justice of the rule concretely stated in People v. Perales, supra, could have no more complete vindication than is afforded by the case before us. The whole tenor of the argument for the people in this proceeding was that the concealment consisted of withholding knowledge of the commission of the felony from a magistrate, and we have seen that mere silence or failure to disclose such knowledge did not constitute one an accessory at common law and does not have that effect under the Code.

It follows that the petitioner is entitled to be discharged from custody, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. CONNESS. (Cr. 1,274.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1906.)

1. PROSTITUTION—PLACING OR LEAVING WIFE IN HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION.

St. 1891, p. 285, c. 206, providing that any man who places, or procures any other person to place, his wife in a house of prostitution, or connives at or permits the placing of his wife in a house of prostitution, shall be guilty of a felony, not only makes it a felony for a husband to place his wife in a house of prostitution for the purpose of prostitution, but also makes him guilty of an offense for allowing her to remain in such a house for the purpose of engaging in an innocent occupation therein.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

St. 1891, p. 285, authorizing a sentence of from three to ten years in the state prison for allowing one's wife to remain in a house of prostitution, is not in conflict with the Constitution, prohibiting the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3304-3309.]

3. PROSTITUTION—PLACING OR LEAVING WIFE IN HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An information alleging that accused "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously connive at, consent to, and permit the placing and leaving" of his wife "in a house of prostitution, * * * and did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously allow and permit his said wife to remain in said house of prostitution," sufficiently charges the crime created by St. 1891, p. 285, c. 206, punishing any man who places or leaves his wife in a house of prostitution, etc.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial of a husband charged with placing and permitting his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, there was evidence that he was anxious to have her leave the house, and that he tried in various ways to induce her to do so, the refusal to charge that, though the wife resided in a house of prostitution and the husband knew it, it was still the duty of the jury to permit no presumption to be raised against the husband, and, if no other facts were established, the husband should be acquitted, was error, especially where the instruction of the court implied that the husband could be guilty, though he did not wish his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, and had had nothing to do with her going there.

5. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The question of restricting the cross-examination of a witness, with respect to questions as to whether or not he had previously talked with certain persons about his testimony, is within the discretion of the trial court, not reviewable on appeal in the absence of a clear abuse thereof.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Thornton D. Conness was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Everts & Ewing and Thompson & Prince, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Geo. W. Jones, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SHAW, J. The information in this case charges that the defendant did "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously connive at, consent to, and permit the placing and leaving of one Mary L. Conness, who was then and there the wife of him, the said Thornton D. Conness, in a house of prostitution, known as the 'Diamond Palace,' situate at the corner of Tulare and E Streets, in the city of Fresno, and did then and there willfully and unlawfully and feloniously allow and permit his said wife to remain in said house of prostitution; contrary," etc. The defendant was tried and convicted on this charge, and was sentenced to a term of six years in the state prison. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first point presented on the appeal from the judgment is that the information does not charge a public offense. The defect asserted is that it fails to aver that the acts of the defendant were done with the intent, on his part, that his wife should devote herself to prostitution while she was in the house in which he had placed her and permitted her to remain. It is argued that a woman may be in a bawdy house as a cook, seamstress, or housemaid without herself engaging in the practice of prostitution, and that the statute, according to what is claimed to be its true effect and purpose, does not forbid a husband to place or leave his wife in such a house, or to allow her or permit her to remain therein, unless she there becomes a prostitute, nor unless he intends that she shall do so. The information follows the words of the statute, which is as follows: "Any man who by force, fraud, intimidation, threats, persuasions, promises, or any other means, places or leaves, or procures any other person or persons to place or leave his wife in a house of prostitution, or connives at, consents to, or permits the placing or leaving of his wife in a house of prostitution, or allows or permits his wife to remain therein, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the state prison for not less than three years nor more than ten years." St. 1891, p. 285, c. 206.

There is nothing in the language of this statute which expresses the idea that the wife must be placed or allowed to remain in the house for the purpose of having her engage in prostitution therein. If such element constitutes a necessary part of the offense, it must be read into the statute by some process of constructive interpretation. We do not think it was so intended. The fact that no words expressing that idea are inserted in the statute, when a very few words would have sufficed for that purpose, is a strong indication of the legislative intent that the offense should be complete without it. It is, indeed, conclusive on that point, unless there is something in the nature of the acts described as constituting the offense, or in the circumstances attending them, which requires the court, in construing the language, to disregard the ordinary meaning of the words and add a thought not expressed thereby—something which makes its literal meaning so absurd or unreasonable as to compel the conclusion that the Legislature could not have so intended it. Nothing producing this effect appears. There is, it is true, no moral turpitude in the occupation of cook, seamstress, or housemaid. All are honorable vocations which every female has a legal right to pursue, and they are entirely consistent with virtue, chastity, and refinement. But it by no means follows that it would be absurd or unreasonable, or an undue restriction to the right of labor, to forbid a husband from placing or leaving his wife in such a place, or from allowing her to remain there for the purpose of engaging in such innocent occupation. It would not be unreasonable or absurd, or an undue restriction of personal liberty, to forbid all persons from remaining in a bawdy house, nor to forbid any person from allowing, or permitting another to remain there, in the sense in which the words "allow" and "permit" are used in this statute.

A bawdy house is a place of the utmost moral pollution and social degradation. It is a well-known fact that such places, though perhaps to some extent inevitable, are among the most serious and threatening of the dangers to the physical and moral well-being of the human race. A sound public policy requires that their existence and continuance should be discouraged, discountenanced, and prevented by all possible legal means. This is the avowed policy of the law. By the Penal Code it is made a misdemeanor to keep such a place, or to reside therein (section 315); or to let an apartment or tenement knowing that it is to be used for such purpose (section 316); or to admit a minor of either sex thereto for any purpose whatever, or for any parent or guardian of such minor to sanction, or connive at, the admission of a minor to any such house or to any room thereof (section 309); or, by invitation or device, to prevail upon any person to visit such a house, regardless of the purpose of such visit (section 318); or for any person having messengers for hire to send any minor engaged in such work to serve any inmate of such house, or to enter the same (section 1389); or, except in the case of a California Indian, to live in or about such house for any purpose (section 647). The provision that a husband shall not allow or permit his wife to remain in a house of that character, even to engage in an innocent or otherwise useful occupation therein, is in complete harmony with these restrictions, and is entirely consistent with the public policy which they are intended to enforce. There are good reasons for the view that the Legislature intended the statute to be effective according to its literal import. Vice is contagious, and environment is usually potent in forming or influencing character. It is almost impossible that a chaste woman should long remain in such vile surroundings without herself becoming vile. No woman, decent at heart, would submit to it for a moment, except from the direst necessity. It may have been the purpose to protect married women from exposure to such influences by forbidding the assent of a sordid or vicious husband to her presence there for any purpose. Again, it is inconceivable that a husband would, with a willing mind, assent that his wife should become an inmate of a house of ill fame for any purpose, unless he intended, or expected, that she should be a prostitute therein. Any claim that she was there for any decent purpose would, in the vast majority of cases, be the merest pretense to cover the real purpose. The exceptions would be so few and so unworthy as to require no consideration or protection from the law. Nevertheless, owing to the depraved character of those who would usually be the only persons cognizant of the facts, and the inherent difficulties of obtaining other than inferential evidence of the facts of intent and of actual prostitution, it would be difficult to prove them to the satisfaction of a jury beyond reasonable doubt if they were made necessary to constitute the crime. And yet both facts would almost invariably exist in every such case, where the relations between the spouses were harmonious. Proof of the facts that a wife inhabits a house of ill fame, and that the husband consents, or willingly suffers it, would create a strong inference, almost amounting to a presumption, that she is unchaste, and that he intends that she shall be. To require averment of these facts, which practically always accompany those mentioned in the statute, would not only tend to some extent to encourage such places by permitting married women to work therein, but, by making convictions much more difficult in every case, it would also often serve to defeat the purpose of the statute, so far as it was really intended to prevent a vile husband from profiting by the prostitution of his wife. The Legislature may have believed that such purpose could best be accomplished by the absolute inhibition of a life by the wife in such a place with the assent of the husband, even for an innocent purpose, or, at least, by providing that his intentions as to her conduct while remaining therein should be immaterial in averring or proving the offense.

It may be suggested that the making of such acts a felony, with the severe punishment of 10 years' imprisonment in the state prison, which the law authorizes, puts it out of harmony with the other statutes above referred to, which make acts of similar character misdemeanors only, with a comparatively slight punishment. This inconsistency, conceding it to be such, is purely a matter of legislative judgment and discretion; and it does not render the literal effect of the statute under consideration so unreasonable or absurd as to require a different interpretation. The degree of the offense and the severity of the punishment to be imposed are subjects for the legislative determination, and usually have but little bearing on the question of the interpretation of the law, but are to be considered chiefly upon the question whether or not the punishment is so severe that it violates the prohibition of the Constitution against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. In view of the evils which the statute aims to suppress, and the large discretion of the legislative department of the state in such matters of policy, it cannot be said that this statute is in conflict with this provision of the Constitution.

We are of the opinion that the information sufficiently charges a public offense, under the statute above quoted, and that it is not necessary in a prosecution for such offense to allege or prove either that the wife followed the practice of prostitution after becoming an inmate of the house, or that the husband intended that she should. It is freely admitted that there may be cases where a wife may visit such a house with the consent of her husband and in which he would not be guilty of any offense under this statute; as, for instance, if she goes for charitable purposes, or to induce the inmates thereof to reform. No difficulty would be found in disposing of such cases, even if we may imagine that some prosecutor will be inveigled into charging such a person with crime, or foolish enough to do so with full knowledge of the circumstances. It would be a case for the application of the old rule whereby a surgeon who attended to the duty of bleeding a sick person in the streets was held to be not guilty of a violation of the law which in express terms made it a crime to let blood in the street.

The following instruction was asked by the defendant and refused by the court: "You are further instructed that if you find from the evidence, beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, that the defendant in this case was a married man, that his wife resided in a house of prostitution, and that this said defendant knew that she was residing therein, it is still your duty to permit no presumption of law from these facts to be raised against this defendant, and, if no other facts are established in this case except the foregoing, it is your duty under the law to acquit this defendant." We are of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to have this instruction given. There was much evidence in his behalf to the effect that he was anxious to have her leave the house, and that he tried in various ways to induce her to abandon the life she was leading. A good deal of it was not of a character to inspire belief. But this was a matter within the exclusive province of the jurors, and it may be that, if they had been instructed as requested, they would have considered that there was a reasonable doubt that the defendant had anything to do with the presence of his wife in the house, or of his willingness that she should remain therein, or that they would have been in such reasonable doubt in regard to whether any facts were established, except that she was his wife and that she resided in a bawdy house with his knowledge. If such was their view of the evidence, they should have returned a verdict of acquittal. The statute is in the disjunctive, and it declares that, if the husband shall "allow" his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, he is guilty of a felony. The word "allow" here means more than mere "abstinence from prevention," as the court below defined it in an instruction given to the jury. It has almost the identical meaning of the word "permit," also used in the statute. It implies some sort of assent on the part of the husband. There must be some active wish, or, at least, willingness, in his mind, after he has knowledge of her presence in the house, that she should continue there—something more than mere indifference to her whereabouts, or passive sufferance in a case where the circumstances do not call upon him to interfere with her conduct. Where he does not, directly or indirectly, place or leave her in the house, or connive at, consent to, or permit of her going there (using the word "permit" in the same sense which we attribute to the word "allow"), he must, to some extent, be an accomplice in her remaining there after he has knowledge of the fact. The defendant was entitled to an affirmative statement from the court such as that contained in the instruction refused. There is nothing in the instructions given which could serve as a substitute for this instruction. On the contrary, the definition of the word "allow" given by the court implies that the defendant could be guilty, although he did not wish his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, had nothing to do with her going there, and was a party to her being there only by reason of the fact that he took no active steps to remove her therefrom. The instruction, as asked, is rendered somewhat confusing, and certainly less clear, by the interpolation of the phrase, "it is still your duty to permit no presumption of law from these facts to be raised against this defendant." Although this statement is technically true, it might well have been eliminated from the instruction. It does not, however, in connection with the other parts of the instruction, render it erroneous as a whole.

Complaint is made that the court unfairly restricted the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution by refusing to allow general questions as to whether or not they had previously talked with certain persons about their testimony. This is a subject upon which the trial court has much discretion, and usually its exercise of the discretion will not be interfered with on appeal. In the present case it did not appear that counsel had in view the disclosure of any specific statement of the witness inconsistent with his testimony, or of any declaration or conduct affecting his motive, or showing interest or bias. It appeared that the questions were asked without definite aim, and in the mere hope that by repeated questions something of value to the defendant might be elicited. The court properly refused to allow such a course. A trial is not had for the purpose of allowing the defendant an opportunity to discover evidence in his behalf, but to enable him to produce such evidence as he may desire. If counsel, in good faith, had the expectation that the questions would elicit impeaching testimony, they must or should have known something of its character, and they should have stated to the court specifically what they expected in that regard. The court may, in its discretion, allow such questions without a previous declaration, where it appears that the declaration may serve to warn an unfair witness in time to allow him to prepare his answer, but it may also refuse to do so, in its discretion. There must be a very clear and flagrant abuse of this discretion, and a positive and apparent injury therefrom, to justify this court in reversing a case on account of it.

Many other exceptions are noted in the record and discussed to some extent in the briefs, but they are of slight importance, and we deem it unnecessary to consider them.

LEVISON v. BOAS. (S. F. 3,947.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1907.)

1. PAWNBROKERS—WHO ARE PAWNBROKERS.

Under Pen. Code, § 338, declaring that every person who carries on the business of pawnbroker, by receiving goods in pledge for loans at a greater rate of interest than 10 per cent. per annum, except by authority of a license, is guilty of a misdemeanor, one is a pawnbroker who carries on the business of receiving goods in pledge for loans, exacting interest for the loans.

2. SAME.

One is no less a pawnbroker because making loans on pledges of no other kinds of goods than jewelry and diamonds.

3. SAME.

One carries on the business of pawnbrokers so as to be subject to regulations of such business, though at the same time and place he conducts other branches of business.

4. SAME.

One is no less a pawnbroker because he requires pawnors to execute notes or chattel mortgages in connection with the transaction, whether or not he relies exclusively on the goods received, as, under Civ. Code, §§ 2924, 2987, 2988, every contract by which possession of personal property is transferred as security, only, is a pledge.

5. SAME—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH REGULATIONS—EFFECT ON CONTRACT.

Contracts of pledge made with a pawnbroker are void where he does this business without a license, for which, under Pen. Code, § 338, he is guilty of a misdemeanor, and fails to make prescribed entries of his transactions in a register, for which, under section 339, he is also guilty of a misdemeanor.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

M. B. Kellogg, Francis J. Heney, and C. A. S. Frost, for appellant. Lucius L. Solomons, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff is the receiver of the insolvent copartnership of Schumacher & Co. While the firm of Schumacher & Co. was transacting its business as diamond and jewelry merchants one of the members of the firm, on behalf of the firm, at various times borrowed money from the defendant, pledging with him, as security for the loans, diamonds and other jewels and articles of jewelry. After his appointment the receiver made demand upon defendant for a restoration and return of the pledges upon the ground that defendant was, and was acting as, a pawnbroker, and that, because of his violations of the laws of the state and of the municipality of San Francisco in the conduct of his business as pawnbroker, the contracts were void. He therefore insisted that the pledges should be returned, and that defendant should be relegated to the position of a general creditor. Upon the refusal of defendant to accede to this demand, the receiver, with permission, of course, brought suit. The suit was submitted for decision upon an agreed statement of facts, judgment passed for defendant, and the receiver appeals.

There being no controversy over the facts, the questions to be resolved are two: First, under the facts, was defendant a pawnbroker? Second, if a pawnbroker, did his unquestioned failure to comply with the statutes of the state and the ordinances of San Francisco concerning pawnbrokers render void his contracts with Schumacher & Co.?

The word "pawnbroker" has been variously defined as "any person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn or exchange, any goods, wares or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the payment of money loaned thereon." Anderson's Law Dictionary, page 759. "One who makes a business of loaning money for interest, and receives personal property in security for the payment of the same." English Law Dictionary, page 607. Or, again: "A pawn is a pledge to a pawnbroker, or person who keeps a shop for the purchase or sale of goods, and takes goods by way of security for money advanced thereon." 2 Rapalge & Lawrence Dictionary, page 940. Our Penal Code, section 338, declares that: "Every person who carries on the business of pawnbroker, by receiving goods in pledge for loans at any rate of interest above the rate of ten per cent. per annum, except by authority of a license, is guilty of a misdemeanor." Under our law, therefore, one is a pawnbroker who carries on the business of receiving goods in pledge for loans, exacting an interest for those loans. If the rate of interest which he exacts exceeds 10 per cent. per annum, he is guilty of a misdemeanor if he conducts his business without first procuring a license so to do. Analyzing these definitions for the better understanding of the facts of this case which are to follow, it becomes apparent that, to constitute a person a pawnbroker, two requisites must be established. First, the person must receive goods in pledge for loans at a rate of interest; and second, this must be his business, or a well-defined part of his business. A single transaction, or an occasional loan, would not establish that a person "carried on the business of pawnbroker." The stipulated facts as to defendant, Boas, may be summarized as follows: For more than 30 years last past he has maintained an office in the city and county of San Francisco for the transaction of business as a money lender, and during all of said time was generally known to the public to be engaged in the business of lending money at his said office, upon mortgages on real estate, upon mortgages upon personal property, and upon assignments of life insurance policies, and upon assignments of public warrants, and upon unsecured notes from merchants reputed to be solvent, "and as a part of his regular business was likewise generally known to the public to be there receiving jewelry and diamonds in pledge for loans, but not to be receiving any other class of goods, wares or merchandise in pledge for loans." He paid a municipal license as a money broker, and the sign above his place of business was either that of "Broker" or that of "Money Broker," the sign being changed at various times. The respondent, neither at the time of the making of the loans, nor at any time, had a license to carry on or conduct the business of pawnbroker. The interest charged upon the loans exceeded 10 per cent. per annum. In making the loans the defendant relied solely upon the diamonds and jewelry so pledged with him as security for his debt, giving no weight or consideration whatever to the responsibility or nonresponsibility of the copartnership firm of Schumacher & Co., or of either of its partners. Nor did he at the time of making the loans deliver to the partnership, or to any person on its behalf, a written copy of any entry made by him, or by any person in his behalf, in a register kept by him for that purpose, in the English, or in any other, language, showing the date, duration, amount, or rate of interest of such loan, or showing an accurate description of the property so pledged, or showing the name or residence of the pledgor, as required by sections 338 and 339 of the Penal Code, and by certain municipal ordinances of the city and county of San Francisco. During all of this time the ordinances of the city and county of San Francisco required every keeper of a pawnbroker's shop or office to pay a license of $31 per quarter, and required that every person engaged in the business of pawnbroker should keep a book in which should be entered at the time, in the English language, a true and accurate description of every article purchased by them, the name and residence of the vendor, the amount paid, the date and hour of purchase, and that such book should be exhibited upon request of any police officer of the permanent police force of the city. A violation of the terms of these ordinances was declared a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both. The city and county of San Francisco is given power to license and regulate pawnbrokers and to enact regulations to protect the public in dealing with them, to fix the amount of the license and to impose fines, penalties and forfeitures for the violation of such ordinances. Pol. Code, § 4408, subds. 7, 8, 14, 15; Municipal Corporation Act, § 64, subd. 16; Gen. Laws 1903, p. 666; Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, art. 2, c. 2, § 1, subds. 1, 16; article 8, c. 4, § 7; St. 1899, pp. 248, 249, 329, c. 2.

Under this state of the law and of the facts, was defendant a pawnbroker? Unhesitatingly it is answered that he was. He loaned money upon personal property pledged or pawned with him. He loaned this money upon the security of the pledge and pawn. He charged and collected upon these loans a high rate of interest, exceeding 10 per cent. per annum. He did all of these things continuously, and as a part of his regular business, at a fixed place of business, and the doing of these things—the carrying on of this business—was publicly known. That he limited his operations to certain classes of goods, namely, jewels and jewelry, does not militate against this conclusion. No one would hesitate to say that one who, as a regular business, received in pledge or pawn second-hand clothing, loaning money upon it at usurious rates of interest, was a pawnbroker. Yet the kinds of jewels, and, still more, the kinds of manufactured products known as jewelry, are vastly greater than the kinds of second-hand garments. So that the mere limiting of a dealer's sphere of operations to one or another of a particular class of goods is not at all the test of the character of his business.

Nor was his business any less that of a pawnbroker because at the same time and at the same place he conducted another business, or branches of his business, which were not of this character. A question identical in principle arose in City of Los Angeles v. Loan, etc., Co., 109 Cal. 396, 42 Pac. 149, where the defendant incorporated to do a trust and safe deposit business and general banking business, had a savings department in which term savings deposits were received, and insisted that it was not taxable as a savings and loan corporation upon its term deposits. The trial court held that the deposits in question should not be assessed or treated as the property of the bank, but should be taxed with the safe deposits as ordinary commercial deposits. But this court held that the fact that the loan company was engaged in a general banking business, and a safe deposit business, in addition to that of receiving savings deposits, did not exempt it from taxation as a savings bank upon its savings deposits. After setting forth that the corporation was conducting different kinds of business, it declared: "Our conclusion is * * * that, as to the part of its business in controversy, it was de facto a savings corporation, and that the taxes in question were properly levied and assessed." When making such contracts of pledge or pawn becomes, in whole or in substance, part of the business of a man, his trade, his occupation, his means of obtaining a livelihood, or of making or adding to his fortune, he becomes a pawnbroker within the meaning of the law.

Nor was respondent the less a pawnbroker because he required the pledgor or pawnor to execute a promissory note or chattel mortgage in connection with the transaction. First, because it is admitted that reliance was placed upon the pledge; and second, because the transactions, no matter what force the respondent may have thought attached to his notes and chattel mortgages, were, under our law, pledges, and nothing else. "Every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only, is to be deemed a pledge." Civil Code, §§ 2987, 2988. "Every transfer of an interest in property * * * made only as security for the performance of another act, is to be deemed a mortgage, except when, in the case of personal property, it is accompanied by actual change of possession, in which case it is to be deemed a pledge." Civil Code, § 2924. The very fact that the respondent took possession of the property as a pledge, and relied upon his possession as a pledge, negatives the conception of a chattel mortgage. This precise question arose in Minnesota, and the same contention was made. It was disposed of by the Supreme Court of that state as follows: "We are also of the opinion that the evidence justified the trial court in finding that the defendant was conducting the business of pawnbroker. The evidence does not consist wholly, as counsel claims, of the two loans. There was evidence of admission of defendant, or her admitted general agent, that those loans were but samples of the kind of business which she was conducting, and that she was in the habit of lending money on watches, stocks, time checks, or any other kind of security, but that she thought she was not required to obtain a license because she issued no tickets, but took notes and chattel mortgages from the borrowers. In the instance referred to it was admitted that the articles taken as security were deposited with her, and the transactions were none the less a loan of money on pawn or pledge, because she took a chattel mortgage on the article deposited." City of St. Paul v. Lytle, 69 Minn. 1, 71 N. W. 703.

It being thus established that defendant was a pawnbroker, and it being admitted that, in the conduct of his business, he neither procured the license required by law, nor observed the regulations prescribed by the statutes of the state and by municipal ordinance for the conduct of the business of pawnbroker, there is presented the second question: What legal consequences followed this dereliction in the matter of these contracts of pledge? And first, as having to do with the question, it is to be noted that the business of a pawnbroker is one which has always been regarded as subject to police regulation for the benefit of the public, and to prevent frauds upon it. Thus, touching a pawnbroker act, the Court of Common Pleas of England said: "It is quite evident that the statute was passed not only for the purpose of protecting the numerous parties who borrow money on small pledges, but also the public, against frauds committed on third persons, the real owners of goods, by pledging their property without their consent." Ferguson v. Norman, 5 Bing. New Cases, 76. "The business (pawnbroker), therefore, comes expressly within the control of the police power of the state, and is properly subject to reasonable rules and regulations." Grand Rapids v. Braudy (Mich.) 64 N. W. 29, 32 L. R. A. 116, 55 Am. St. Rep. 472. And again, says the Supreme Court of Missouri: "The city may not only regulate, but suppress, pawnbrokers, or refuse to license such occupation altogether. No person has the right to follow such occupation within the limits of said city without first obtaining a license from its authorities for that purpose, which may be granted or withheld at pleasure. The business is a privilege, not a right, and he who avails himself of it and derives its benefits must bear its burdens and conform to the laws in force regulating the occupation." St. Joseph v. Levin, 128 Mo. 588, 31 S. W. 101, 49 Am. St. Rep. 577. See, also, Ex parte Lichtenstein, 67 Cal. 359, 7 Pac. 728, 56 Am. Rep. 713.

In the consideration which is to follow, therefore, it is to be borne in mind that we are not dealing with a harmless and legitimate business requiring no regulation, and which, if licensed at all, could be licensed only for purposes of revenue. We are dealing with a business which is, and always has been, subject to police regulation, and which is unlawful if not conducted under the provisions, restrictions, and requirements of the law. The present case presents, then, the question of a statute drafted in the plain exercise of the police power, requiring the doing of certain things, and imposing a penalty for their nonperformance. Is a contract made without observance of the terms of such statute valid or void? It is, of course, undisputed that a contract in violation of a statute is void, and no difficulty can arise in such a case. More trouble has been experienced by the courts where the case has been one in which there has been no express prohibition of the act, but where a penalty for the performance or nonperformance has been imposed. A statute may either expressly prohibit or enjoin an act, or it may impliedly prohibit or enjoin it by fixing a penalty for the performance or omission thereof. As to the effect of such implied prohibitions there was much divergence of opinion upon the part of the English judges, and this difference of view found its way into conflicting and irreconcilable decisions of the courts of our different states. Thus, in Brown v. Duncan, 10 B. & C. 93, the action was on a guaranty for sales of liquor, which had been distilled without a license, under a statute requiring a license and affixing a penalty. It was held that these were mere revenue regulations, and that a breach did not render the trade so illegal as to prevent a recovery for sales. This case was distinguished from the case of Law v. Hodgson, 2 Campbell, 147, which was an action for the value of bricks of dimensions smaller than that required by statute, which statute affixed a penalty for violation. The statute declared merely that bricks shall be made of such dimensions. Lord Ellenborough said: "The first section of this statute absolutely forbids such bricks to be made for sale. Therefore, the plaintiff, in making the bricks in question, was guilty of an absolute breach of the law, and he shall not be permitted to maintain an action for their value." The distinction declared in Brown v. Duncan was that the statute in Law v. Hodgson was designed to protect the public, while that in the case before them was a mere revenue regulation. The influence of these and other like decisions, appealing, as they have, with differing force to the judges of our state courts, has led to much confusion of decision; a confusion, however, which the learned decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Harris v. Runnells, 53 U. S. 79, 13 L. Ed. 901, should do much to eliminate. But it is to be noticed that every case from every court recognizes that, when a statute has been made for the protection of the public, a contract in violation of its provisions is void. Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150, 25 Am. Rep. 671; Griffith v. Wells, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 226; Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Mees. & W. Rep. 149; U. S. Bank v. Owen, 27 U. S. 526, 7 L. Ed. 508; Burck v. Taylor, 152 U. S. 634, 14 Sup. Ct. 693, 38 L. Ed. 578; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267; Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242.

As has been pointed out, sections 338 and 339 of our Penal Code make every person carrying on the business of a pawnbroker, except by the authority of a license, guilty of a misdemeanor; also every person carrying on such business, if he fails at the time of the transaction to enter in a register kept by him for that purpose, in the English language, the date, duration, amount, and rate of interest of every loan made by him, an accurate description of the property pledged, and the name and residence of the pledgor, and to deliver to the pledgor a written copy of such entry, and to keep an account in writing of all sales made by him. It has also been shown that these provisions are, one and all, enacted under the police power for the regulation of the business and the protection of the needy and improvident, and of the general public against oppression and fraud. It has further been shown that, where a statute, designed for the protection of the public, prescribes a penalty, that penalty is the equivalent of an express prohibition, and that a contract in violation of its provisions is void. "Whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case." Coppell v. Hall, 74 U. S. 542, 19 L. Ed. 244; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31. Where the contract is void, the right of the pledgee to hold the property, which right depends upon a valid contract, is, of course, lost. Hilgert v. Levin, 72 Mo. App. 48. It follows in this case, therefore, that these contracts are void, that the lien is lost, and that the judgment should be for plaintiff, unless, as respondent contends, the contracts in this case are severable, as in Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267. Jackson v. Shawl held that where a pawnbroker had loaned money upon property pledged, and the borrower had contracted to pay him more than 4 per cent. interest per month, the borrower could recover possession of the property by tendering the principal and 4 per cent. per month interest, 4 per cent. being the maximum charge permitted to pawnbrokers. The act did not provide that the contract was void, but only that the lender rendered himself liable to a forfeiture of the excess, in a separate suit to be brought for that purpose. It is to be noticed that the illegality of the contract in Jackson v. Shawl went only to the excess of interest charged, and this court applied the general and liberal principle fully recognized by the law, that, when any matter, void even by statute, be mixed up with good matter which is entirely independent of it, the good part shall stand and the rest be held void. But, in the case at bar, the illegality and the prohibition goes to the whole substance of the contract. It is a prohibition of the law from entering into such a contract at all, and the illegality affects the whole transaction from its inception. It is, in this respect, identical with the pawnbroker case of Ferguson v. Norman, 5 Bing. New Cases, 76. In that case a tailor had become bankrupt, but, prior to his bankruptcy, pawned certain goods with the defendant pawnbroker. The English law required the insertion in the books of the pawnbroker of the name of the pledgor and of his residence, with street, place, or square, and whether or not the pledgor was housekeeper or lodger, and required the pawnbroker to make these entries before advancing money. The pawnbroker inserted as pledgor the name of Reeves instead of Bullock, the tailor, gave his residence as Pimlico instead of Haymarket, failed to enter any street, place, or square as his place of residence, and, though Bullock was a housekeeper, entered him in many cases as a lodger. The court said: "A distinction may easily be drawn as to those duties imposed on the pawnbroker which are entirely collateral to the individual contract, and it would be too much to say, because he had not observed the enactment of the statute in such matters, that therefore the contract made by him should be void. Suppose an instance in which his name was required to be put up over the door, and some mistake had been made. A penalty is given for not putting up the name; but it would not follow that contracts entered into by an individual whose name had been incorrectly spelled, would be therefore void. However, when we look at the present section, the case is extremely simple. * * * This, therefore, being the object and intention of the Legislature, and the requisites being such as are to be performed at the time of, and previously to, entering into the contract, I think the contract must be held to be void, notwithstanding there are specific penalties for the omission of such requisites. * * * And it comes around to this, that, if the contract be void, the lien is void also, and I see no ground on which the right of the pawnbroker to resist this action can be set up."

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court to enter judgment for plaintiff as prayed for.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 4, 1907.)

1. HIGHWAYS—OBSTRUCTION — PUBLIC NUISANCE.

By the express provisions of Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, and Pen. Code, § 370, anything unlawfully obstructing the free passage or use in the customary manner of a public highway is a public nuisance.

2. SAME—PROCEEDINGS TO ABATE NUISANCE.

Act March 15, 1899, St. 1899, p. 103, c. 88, authorizes the district attorney of any county in which a public nuisance may exist to begin a civil action in the name of the state to abate the same. Held, that the fact that other remedies may exist for the abatement of a public nuisance consisting of the obstruction of a public highway does not affect the power in such regard conferred on district attorney by the statute.

3. TRIAL — TRIAL BY COURT — FINDINGS OF FACT—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS.

It is only where the probative facts found are necessarily in conflict with the ultimate facts found that the former can prevail over the ultimate facts.

4. SAME—FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS.

In an action by the people to abate an obstruction in a highway, the complainant alleged certain probative facts but alleged that the street was a public highway, and the court, in addition to finding the probative facts alleged, found, under the "findings of facts," that the street was a public highway. Held that, though the former facts found did not show that the street was a public highway, such fact was of no avail to defendant on appeal, as the latter finding of the court was a finding of an ultimate fact and could not be treated as a conclusion of law or as a mere general conclusion of fact from the specific facts previously found.

5. Appeal and Error—Presumptions—Evidence.

A failure to find upon some issue, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, is no ground for reversal unless it be shown by statement of facts or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thomas J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by the people against J. S. McCue and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. V. Morehouse, J. E. Alexander, and M. C. Dufficy, for appellants. Thomas P. Boyd, Dist. Atty., for the State.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was brought by the district attorney of Marin county in the name of the people of the state, to abate, as public nuisances, obstructions maintained by defendants in certain alleged public highways of said county. As to certain of said alleged public highways, judgment was given in favor of plaintiff, declaring the same to be public highways, and the obstructions thereon maintained by defendants to be public nuisances, directing the removal of said obstructions by defendants, and enjoining defendants from maintaining on said highways any obstruction which would interfere with the right of the public to use the same as public highways. Defendants have appealed from this judgment on the judgment roll alone.

By express provision of statute, anything which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of a public highway is a public nuisance. Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480; Pen. Code, § 370. See, also, Siskiyou Lumber, etc., Co. v. Rostel, 121 Cal. 511, 513, 53 Pac. 1118; Marini v. Graham, 67 Cal. 130, 7 Pac. 442; Lewiston Turnpike Co. v. S. & W., etc., Co., 41 Cal. 562, 564. Under the express provisions of the act of March 15, 1899, authorizing the district attorney of any county in which a public nuisance may exist to bring a civil action in the name of the people of the state to abate the same (St. 1899, p. 103, c. 88), the district attorney was empowered to commence and maintain this action without any previous order of the board of supervisors directing him to so do. The act requires him to bring such an action when directed by the supervisors, and authorizes him to do so on his own motion and without any order to that effect whenever he deems such action proper. The fact that other remedies may exist for the abatement of such public nuisances as obstructions of public highways cannot affect the power in this regard conferred upon the district attorney by the act of March 15, 1899.

The main argument for reversal of the judgment is based upon the contention that the probative facts alleged in the complaint and found by the trial court do not show that the alleged public highways are, in fact, public highways, and in support of this contention learned counsel urge that such probative facts tending to show a dedication of such highways by defendant to the public and acceptance of the same, are not sufficient to establish a dedication and acceptance. If we assume this to be true, we do not see how it can avail defendants on this appeal. Independently of the probative facts alleged, it was in terms unconditionally alleged in the complaint "that each and all of such streets are public highways." The trial court, in addition to finding certain probative facts, found as a fact, in express terms and unconditionally, "that each and all of said streets are public highways." This was undoubtedly a finding of the ultimate fact. Bequette v. Patterson, 104 Cal. 282, 285, 37 Pac. 917. Defendants claim that this finding must be treated as a conclusion of law based upon the probative facts found, or as a mere general conclusion of fact from the specific facts previously found, but the record does not warrant us in so considering it. It is contained in the "findings of fact," as distinguished from the "conclusions of law," and therefore does not fall within the rule declared in such cases as Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 Pac. 161; Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 538, 39 Pac. 922, and Niles v. City of Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 572, 578, 58 Pac. 190, where it was sought to treat a purported conclusion of law as a misplaced finding of fact. In those cases, it was plain, on the face of the record, that the alleged finding was merely what it purported to be, viz., a conclusion drawn by the court from the facts previously found. Nor is there anything on the face of the finding under discussion to indicate that it was simply a conclusion from the probative facts previously found, and herein this case differs from such cases as People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 76, 22 Pac. 474, 15 Am. St. Rep. 22, and Geer v. Sibley, 83 Cal. 1, 23 Pac. 220. In People v. Reed, supra, the finding was "that, by the acts, facts, and matters above found and recited, said premises above referred to" were dedicated, etc., and it was held that this must be considered as a mere conclusion, the court saying: "This finding is based upon the other facts found. It recites in terms that 'by the acts, facts, and matters above found, said premises were by said parties dedicated.' It may be that, if this finding had stood alone, and had not been put in this argumentative form, it might have been upheld as a sufficient finding of an ultimate fact. But this cannot be so where the facts are fully found, and the general finding of a dedication is expressly drawn as a conclusion from such facts. Counsel say it does not appear that the court found all of the facts proved. But it does appear from the finding itself that it was based entirely upon the facts found, and not, in whole or in part, on facts proved but not found. Therefore, if the specific facts found do not support this one, which is a summing up of the others, the judgment should be reversed." The situation was practically the same in Geer v. Sibley, supra.

In the case at bar, as we have seen, the finding did not purport to be drawn as a conclusion from anything previously found, and was in no way argumentative in form, and it is only by indulging in surmise or conjecture that we could hold it to have been so drawn. This we are not permitted to do for the purpose of disturbing the judgment of the trial court. It is elementary that, if findings of fact are reasonably susceptible of such a construction as will support a judgment, they must receive that construction rather than one that will not so support it. Nor is there anything in the findings of probative facts that is at all necessarily inconsistent with the finding under discussion. All of those probative facts may be true and the finding under discussion also be true. It is well settled in this state that a clear, specific finding of the ultimate fact must prevail over findings of probative facts, where there is no necessary conflict between the probative facts found and the finding of the ultimate fact. Thus, in Smith v. Acker, 52 Cal. 217, it was claimed, upon an appeal on the judgment roll alone, that, in view of probative facts found, the finding as to ownership of land could not be sustained. After stating that the transcript did not show clearly that the numerous probative facts found were all the probative facts shown by the evidence, the court said: "It has been held that, where facts are found from which the existence of the ultimate fact must be conclusively inferred, the finding is sufficient as a finding of the ultimate fact. But, when the ultimate fact is found, no finding of probative facts, which may tend to establish that the ultimate fact was found against the evidence, can overcome the principal finding." The same ruling was made in Frazier v. Crowell, 52 Cal. 399, 402, where there was no necessary conflict between the finding of ultimate fact and the findings of probative facts. The same rule was declared in Gill v. Driver, 90 Cal. 72, 27 Pac. 64, where it was assumed that the probative facts found were insufficient to support the judgment, the court saying: "Ultimate facts were found which do support the judgment; and they are not questioned, nor could they be, without bringing up the evidence in a statement or bill of exceptions." The same rule has been adhered to in several later cases. See Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 305, 38 Pac. 740; Rankin v. Newman, 107 Cal. 602, 608, 40 Pac. 1024; Com. Bank v. Redfield, 122 Cal. 405, 408, 55 Pac. 160; Brown v. Mutual Reserve, etc., Ass'n, 137 Cal. 278, 70 Pac. 187. It is only where the probative facts found are necessarily in conflict with the ultimate fact found that the findings of probative facts can prevail over a clear and express finding of ultimate fact. See Howeth v. Sullenger, 113 Cal. 547, 551, 45 Pac. 841. It is, therefore, clear that the finding under discussion must be treated as a finding of the ultimate fact of public highway, and must be held to be sufficient on that point regardless of the question as to the sufficiency of the probative facts found. It follows that the findings sufficiently support the judgment. In the absence of a bill of exceptions or statement showing the evidence, the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding cannot, of course, be considered.

Complaint is made that the trial court failed to find upon certain affirmative allegations made in the answer, such as that the alleged streets were never accepted or used by the public, that the board of supervisors had refused to accept the same, and that the board of supervisors had abandoned the same as public highways. If it be conceded that any of these matters are not sufficiently embraced in the finding of public highway already discussed, it does not appear that any evidence was introduced in support of such allegations. It is well settled that a failure to find upon some issue made by the answer, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held ground for reversal, unless it is shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue. See Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 439, 82 Pac. 66; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Marchant v. Hayes, 117 Cal. 669, 672, 49 Pac. 840; Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 529, 51 Pac. 848; Rogers v. Duff, 97 Cal. 63, 69, 31 Pac. 836.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1907.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—NOTICE—RECORD.

A guardian appropriated a sum of money belonging to his infant ward and made a note to the ward and executed a mortgage upon land owned by the guardian to secure the note. The mortgage was filed, but subsequently, desiring to borrow more money, he caused an acknowledgment of satisfaction of the mortgage to be entered, signing the acknowledgment as guardian, whereupon he executed a note and mortgage on the land to another person in consideration of a loan, and thereafter the guardian made various sales of parcels of the land, and there was never any settlement between the guardian and ward. Held, that the ward, after his majority, was not entitled to a foreclosure as against those who had purchased on the faith of the record, since, if the ward had an undisclosed lien on the property, so much of the moneys that the purchasers paid as might be necessary to clear the lien was taken by the guardian as money of the ward, and, if he thereafter misappropriated it, the purchasers would be protected against the consequences.

John S. Chapman, Johnston & Jones, Stanton L. Carter, Platt & Bayne, and H. H. Walsh, for appellants. Coldwell & Borland and N. C. Coldwell, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been given by the defendant Sayle to plaintiff on the 15th day of November, 1881, to secure the payment of a promissory note made by Sayle at the same date. The amount of the promissory note was $2,000. A trial was had, resulting in judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $16,480.50, and for a decree of the sale of the mortgaged premises. The motion for a new trial was denied, and certain of the defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion.

The salient facts of the case are these: Sayle, who was a practicing lawyer, married the mother of the plaintiff, who was then an infant about a year old. He was appointed guardian of the person and estate of the infant, and there came into his possession as such guardian of the estate the sum of $2,000. He continued to act as guardian, and the court finds that he remained such guardian until the 16th day of May, 1901, at which time the child attained its majority; but, in fact, there was never any settlement of Sayle's account as guardian, nor was there ever anything done in reference to the guardianship and he was never discharged. Immediately upon, or shortly after, receiving this $2,000 belonging to his infant ward, Sayle, who was the leading witness for the plaintiff, declares that he "borrowed" the money. The fact appears to be that he appropriated it to his own use without any order of court—in brief, embezzled it. He testifies he made a promissory note to his ward, then about a year and a half old, in the sum of $2,000, and executed a mortgage upon land which he owned, securing this note. He filed the mortgage with the county recorder of Fresno county, where the land was situated, and paid the fees for the filing, and delivered the promissory note to his wife, who was the mother of the plaintiff. None of these transactions, it is perhaps needless to say—neither the "borrowing" of the ward's money, nor the giving of the note and mortgage—was done by the authority of, or had the sanction of, the court. About a year afterwards, desiring to borrow more money, he caused to be entered upon the margin of the record an acknowledgment of full payment and satisfaction of the mortgage and the debt thereby secured, signing it "Ralph Wardlaw Cummings, by C. G. Sayle, his duly acting and qualified guardian." This was signed and acknowledged by him on the 24th of October, 1882. Upon the same day that this release was made he gave a note and mortgage to one Baird for $2,000, and received the money therefor. He says that he did not receive the $2,000 in gold coin from Baird on that day for Ralph Cummings, and he did not receive the $2,000 on that day to satisfy the mortgage; that he received it a few days afterwards from Mr. Baird. He did not tell Mr. Baird when he borrowed the money that it was the boy's; that he was doing it as part of the business of the plaintiff. He did tell Mr. Baird, when asked if he had put anything on the property, that he had put a $2,000 mortgage on it in favor of his boy, and told him also that he could control it, and that it would not bother his mortgage, if he would let him have the money and let his mortgage go on record. Baird only agreed to let him have the money upon his acknowledgment of payment and satisfaction of the mortgage to Ralph Cummings. Baird refused to have a second mortgage, and his mortgage was taken as a first mortgage, upon condition of the payment and satisfaction of the mortgage already on the property. He had intended to replace the canceled mortgage of his ward by placing a second mortgage upon the same property in favor of the ward. He did not, however, do this. Years afterwards he made another mortgage to the ward upon another piece of property, to secure the same indebtedness. A satisfaction of the Baird mortgage was entered on March 13, 1884, and on the same day Sayle mortgaged the same land to the predecessor in interest of defendant, Mary J. Blasingame, for $3,000. Subsequent to these transactions he sold the land in parcels to different purchasers for its full value; that is to say, there was never any reduction of the purchase price because of the existence, or supposed existence, of any mortgage upon the property in favor of the plaintiff. The years passed and the ward grew to the age of majority. During this time he lived with his stepfather, and was supported by him. There has never been any settlement of guardianship accounts, and it has never been determined whether Sayle is indebted to his ward, or whether, upon the other hand, the ward's estate is liable to him. Sayle filed a verified petition in insolvency during the ward's minority and made no mention of the mortgage which in this action is claimed to be subsisting and in full force against the property. The mortgage note, indeed, is not produced. Sayle explains that this was carelessly burned up by him in the destruction of some worthless papers when he was changing his law office. The plaintiff himself is not a witness in the case to testify as to any of these matters—as, for example, whether or not there was any sum due him from his guardian—because, manifestly, if his guardian had, in fact, settled with him for this money so borrowed 20 odd years ago, equity would not permit the enforcement of the mortgage. And, more than this, not only is the plaintiff not a witness, but the suit seems to have been instigated and brought by his mother and stepfather. Thus, Mrs. Sayle, wife of Sayle, testifying as to a certain fact, says that she discovered it "in San Francisco when I started this suit." Many more circumstances could be pointed out, but these are sufficient to show that the action, while appealing to the equitable side of the court for the enforcement of a ward's rights, is one wholly without equity. The contention of plaintiff is that the guardian had no power or authority, without the order of a court, to have released the mortgage, and that the mortgage stands as a valid and subsisting lien upon the property; that, while it is true that the purchasers paid full price for the property, and that, upon the record, the mortgage to plaintiff had been released, yet these facts are not sufficient in defense, because they were put upon notice that the guardian could not release the mortgage except upon payment of the money and order of court. This was the view which the trial court adopted, and judgment passed for plaintiff accordingly.

Some interesting questions are here presented, the determination of which would unquestionably prove extremely embarrassing to plaintiff's case. Thus, plaintiff begins his proofs with a showing of this borrowed money by his guardian and the making of the so-called note and mortgage to him—the ward. But a note and mortgage, to be of any validity whatsoever, must be legal contracts, and to every contract there must be two parties. An infant of a year old is plainly incapable of contracting, and it may be seriously doubted, under the circumstances here disclosed, with the additional fact that one of the contracting parties stood in the confidential relation of guardian to the other, whether any contract could be said to exist at all. Certainly, if Sayle had been indicted for embezzlement, his declaration that he had borrowed the money from his ward, and by contract had given a note and mortgage to that infant ward, of the tender age of one year, would scarcely be held to fill the measure of a valid defense. But, aside from this and other like questions with which the case abounds, one proposition is determinative of the matter and upon it this decision may rest. Assuming or conceding that the note and mortgage as given to the ward were valid so as to incumber the land, assuming also and conceding that the release of this mortgage was without authority of the court, conceding, also, that the witness Sayle does endeavor, though shufflingly and evasively, to have it appear that he did not pay over to his ward the money which he received from the Baird mortgage, the fact remains that equity itself, under such circumstances as those here disclosed, makes such payment in pursuance of its maxim that it will regard as done that which ought to have been done. When the money for the release of this mortgage came into Sayle's hands, it was, in equity, the ward's money, and any improper use which Sayle thereafter made of it was but a second embezzlement of the ward's funds. So, too, as to the innocent purchasers (the defendants here) who paid full value for their property. If they, in honest ignorance of the situation, paid full value for property which, so far as the record went, was clear of any incumbrance to this minor ward, and if in fact the ward had some undisclosed lien upon the property, so much of the moneys that these purchasers paid as might be necessary to clear this lien was taken by the guardian as money of the ward, and, if the guardian thereafter made further misappropriation of it, the purchasers are protected against its consequences. This principle is plainly and elaborately enunciated in Hadley v. Chapin, 11 Paige's Chancery (N. Y.) 245, and, if many more cases enunciating the same principle may not be cited, it may be said that few have had the temerity to maintain actions such as the one at bar, and that no cases can be found upholding a contrary doctrine.

It becomes unnecessary to consider the many other objections advanced by appellants, both to the rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting evidence, and to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment, because the proposition which we have enunciated is determinative of the case, for which reason the judgment and order appealed from are reversed as to all of the appealing defendants.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1907.)

1. TAXATION—TAX SALES—NOTICE TO REDEEM—VALIDITY OF TAX DEED.

Pol. Code, § 3785, as amended by St. 1891, p. 133, c. 121, provides that, when property sold for taxes was not redeemed within the statutory time, the collector should make a deed to the purchaser or his assignee, provided such purchaser or assignee within 30 days prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, or 30 days before applying for a deed, had served on the owner of the property or the occupant a written notice as to the time of redemption, or when the purchaser would apply for a deed. Held that, where property was sold for taxes in July, 1894, a conveyance to the purchaser, without any notice of the expiration of the period of redemption having been given, was void.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — RETROSPECTIVE LAWS—STATUTES—RETROACTIVE OPERATION —REDEMPTION FROM TAX SALE.

St. 1895, p. 327, c. 218, and Pol. Code, § 3785, as amended, required the tax collector to make a deed of delinquent property to the state, if it was not redeemed within five years; the provision for notice of intention to apply for a deed previously contained in such section being eliminated. Section 3780 was also amended so as to provide that redemption might be made within five years from the date of purchase or at any time prior to the entry of the sale of the land by the state, and declared that section 3785, as amended, should apply to all tax deeds thereafter made, whether the sale had previously taken place or not. Held, that such sections as amended imposed different and more onerous conditions on the right to redeem property from tax sales, and that, in so far as it was attempted to give them a retroactive effect and make them applicable to prior sales, they were void.

3. QUIETING TITLE — CROSS-COMPLAINT—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

Where, in an action to quiet title, plaintiff did not attack certain cross-complaints filed by the defendants, praying that title be quieted in them, either by demurrer or by motion to strike, but plaintiff answered such cross-complaints and went to trial on the merits, he waived his right to object that such cross-complaints were not a proper method of procedure in such action.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by T. L. Johnson against John Taylor, as administrator, and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to certain land in Mendocino county. The defendants answered, denying the plaintiff's title, and filed cross-complaints setting up title in themselves and praying that their title be quieted as against the plaintiff. Judgment went for the defendants, granting them the affirmative relief sought by them. The plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and he now appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendants are the heirs and successors in interest of W. H. Johnson, and it is admitted that they are the owners of the land, unless W. H. Johnson's title was divested by certain tax proceedings culminating in a deed from the state of California to the plaintiff. The land in question was assessed to W. H. Johnson for the year 1893, and was sold to the state for nonpayment of taxes on July 7, 1894. The tax collector executed a deed to the state on July 7, 1899, and a deed was executed to the plaintiff by the tax collector, acting under the authorization of the state controller, on May 3, 1902. On account of some irregularities in the original deed to the state, an amended deed to the state was executed on April 8, 1902. Pol. Code, § 3805b; St. 1901, p. 651, c. 215.

At the trial the defendants interposed various objections to the introduction in evidence of these instruments. The objections were sustained, and the appellant, upon the appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial, seeks to review these rulings. If any of the objections made were good, the evidence of the tax proceedings was properly excluded. We are satisfied that the respondents are correct in their contention that there is at least one fatal objection to the validity of the tax deeds to the state, and it will be unnecessary therefore to consider the other objections. In 1894, when the sale of the property was made, the Political Code provided that, if property sold for nonpayment of taxes was not redeemed within the time allowed by law, the tax collector must make to the purchaser, or his assignee, a deed of the property, providing, however, that such purchaser, or his assignee, must, 30 days previous to the expiration of the time for such redemption, or 30 days before he applies for the deed, serve upon the owner of the property, or upon the person occupying it, a written notice showing, among other things, when the right of redemption will expire, or when the purchaser will apply for a deed. And it was provided that no deed should be issued by the tax collector until this notice should have been given, and an affidavit filed with the tax collector showing that it had been given. Pol. Code, § 3785, amended in 1891, by St. 1891, p. 134, c. 121. Section 3780 of the same Code provided that a redemption might be made by the owner or any party in interest within 12 months from the date of the purchase, or at any time prior to the filing of the affidavits and the application for a deed, as provided for in section 3785. St. 1891, p. 133, c. 121. As the law then stood, a deed could not be issued to the purchaser without the giving of the notice required by section 3785 (Hughes v. Cannedy, 92 Cal. 382, 28 Pac. 573), and one relying on a tax deed was bound to establish the giving of such notice as a part of his proof of title. (Miller v. Miller, 96 Cal. 376, 31 Pac. 247, 31 Am. St. Rep. 229; Reed v. Lyon, 96 Cal. 501, 31 Pac. 619; Walsh v. Burke, 134 Cal. 594, 66 Pac. 866). Furthermore, this court has held, in San Francisco, etc., Land Co. v. Banbury, 106 Cal. 130, 39 Pac. 439, that the requirement of giving notice applied as well to the state as to a private purchaser. In the case at bar there was no proof of any such notice having been given, and it would follow, if the case is to be decided on the law as it existed when the sale was made, that the plaintiff failed to establish that any title ever passed from W. H. Johnson to the state.

The appellant contends, however, that the validity of the deed is to be determined by the provisions of law existing at the time such deed was made, rather than at the date of sale. Between 1894, when the sale took place, and 1899, when the deed was executed, the law relating to redemption from tax sales and the execution of tax deeds was materially altered. In 1895 the Legislature passed a series of amendments to the Political Code, changing the entire scheme of tax sales. Since 1895 it is provided that all property sold for delinquent taxes shall be sold to the state, and no sales to private purchasers are permitted, as they were prior to the time of these amendments. Section 3771 (St. 1895, p. 377, c. 218). By section 3785, as then amended, the tax collector is required to make a deed to the state if the property is not redeemed within the time (five years) allowed by law for its redemption. The provision for notice of intention to provide for a deed was eliminated from section 3785. Section 3780 was at the same time amended so as to provide that a redemption might be made within five years from the date of the purchase or at any time prior to the entry or sale of the land by the state. And the land became subject to such entry or sale immediately upon the filing of the tax collector's deed with the proper officer. Pol. Code, §§ 3788, 3897.

To apply section 3785, as amended, to sales made before the amendment went into effect, would undoubtedly give the amendment a retroactive effect. Whatever may be the general rule as to construing sections of the Code so as to prevent their having a retroactive effect (Pol. Code, § 3), the Legislature has, in this instance, declared plainly its intent that the amendment to section 3785 should apply to all tax deeds thereafter made, whether or not the sale had already taken place. It appears that the Legislature, in 1895, enacted two different amendments to section 3785 of the Political Code. They are substantially similar so far as the points already noted are concerned. One was approved February 25, 1895, and the other March 28, 1895. The latter, after setting forth the provisions for the making of a deed by the tax collector to the state, in the event the property is not redeemed within the time allowed by law, contains the following language: "In all cases where land has heretofore been sold to the state for delinquent taxes, the deed therefor shall be made to the state within one year after this act takes effect; provided five years shall have elapsed after the date of such sale." In view of this provision, it cannot be doubted that the Legislature intended to make and did make section 3785 apply to cases of sales made prior to the adoption of the amendment, and such amendment must therefore be given a retroactive effect, unless some constitutional right would be violated by giving it such effect.

Ordinarily "the right of redemption from a tax sale must be governed by the law in force at the time of the sale. It cannot be affected by subsequent legislation." Black on Tax Titles, § 175. In Teralta Land, etc., Co. v. Shaffer, 116 Cal. 518, 48 Pac. 613, 58 Am. St. Rep. 194, this court said: "The question here, however, is: Can the Legislature, after a tax sale, lawfully amend the law so as to provide new and more onerous conditions to the right to redeem than those which existed when the sale was made? We think this question is answered in the negative by the elementary writers and by the adjudicated cases." In support of this conclusion the court cites Cooley Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 353; Black on Tax Titles, supra; Blackwell on Tax Titles (5th Ed.) § 729; Negus v. Yancey, 22 Iowa, 57; Goenen v. Schroeder, 8 Minn. 387 (Gil. 344); Robinson v. Howe, 13 Wis. 341; Conway v. Cable, 37 Ill. 82, 87 Am. Dec. 240; Moody v. Hoskins, 64 Miss. 468, 1 South. 622; Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371; Wolfe v. Henderson, 28 Ark. 304. In the Teralta Case the court quotes the following from Merrill v. Dearing, 32 Minn. 479: "The right of property acquired by the purchaser at this sale and the right of redemption remaining to the owner must both be governed by the law in force at the time of sale. Neither, in our judgment, could be either abridged or enlarged by subsequent legislation. This is unquestionably so as to the right of the purchaser. The same rule ought to apply in favor of the owner as against any statute shortening the time to redeem, as it is equally unjust to legislate against the owner of the land as in his favor." Accordingly, it was held in the Teralta Case that the Legislature could not constitutionally, as to past tax sales, pass a law increasing the penalties to be paid on redemption. See, also, Collier v. Shaffer, 137 Cal. 319, 70 Pac. 177, in which the court said: "The redemption of land so sold to the state is governed by the law in force at the date of the sale." If Tuolumne Red'n Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 517, and Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 428, are inconsistent with these views, they must be regarded as overruled by later cases. See Welsh v. Cross, 146 Cal. 621, 630, 81 Pac. 229, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63.

We think the principle of Teralta Land Co. v. Shaffer is decisive of the case at bar. Under the law as it existed at the time of the sale, the plaintiff's right of redemption was not limited by any fixed time. It lasted at least one year, and would last indefinitely thereafter, until 30 days after the purchaser should give the notice required by the statute. As was said in Railroad Company v. Mecartney, 104 Cal. 616, 38 Pac. 448: "It is provided (Pol. Code, § 3780) that a redemption may be made within 12 months from the date of the purchase, or at any time prior to the filing of certain affidavits and the application for the deed. 'Or' may be read 'and,' for it is evident that all the recited events must happen before the owner will be deprived of his right to redeem." To change a right of redemption which lasts indefinitely until the performance by a third party of some act which may or may not be performed, to a right limited by the expiration of a definite period of time, is a substantial change in the right. And while, under the amendments of 1895, the right of redemption does not end absolutely with the expiration of the five years, it does end, without any notice to the owner, as soon as the state sees fit to dispose of the land. Under the old law the owner could rest secure until he received notice of intention to apply for a deed. He then had 30 days in which to redeem. Under the new law his right of redemption could be cut off at any moment after the expiration of the statutory period, without any personal notification to him.

Again, the rights of the owner are injuriously affected in another respect, if the amendment is permitted to operate on past sales. Under the old law, not only does his right to redeem continue until after he has received the statutory notice, but no deed can issue to the purchaser until such notice has been given. By the amendment, the state receives its deed at once on the expiration of the five years. Such deed, when duly acknowledged or proved, is primary evidence of the regularity of the assessment, of the equalization, of the levy of taxes, of the nonpayment of taxes, of the sale, of nonredemption, of the execution of the deed by the proper officer, and is conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings from the assessment to the execution of the deed. Pol. Code, §§ 3786, 3787. Furthermore, such deed transfers to the state "the absolute title to the property described therein." Pol. Code, § 3787. It is not necessary here to decide whether or not the Legislature has the power to alter the rules as to burden of proof of facts recited in deeds already executed—a question on which the authorities are in conflict. See Strode v. Washer, 17 Or. 50, 16 Pac. 926; Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556; Marx v. Hanthorn (C. C.) 30 Fed. 579; Tracy v. Reed (C. C.) 38 Fed. 69. Cf. Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 465, 27 Pac. 356. But certainly there can be no doubt that there is a material distinction between the position of a delinquent taxpayer before a deed divesting his title and having the probative force given by sections 3786 and 3787 has been executed, and his position after the execution of such deed, even though a right of redemption may remain in him for a time. And the conclusion follows that a law which authorizes the making of a deed at a fixed time, where, under the law in force at the date of sale, a deed could not be made until 30 days after the giving of notice by the purchaser, is a change which affects the substance of the owner's right, rather than one which goes merely to the remedy.

There is a marked distinction between this case and Oullahan v. Sweeney, 79 Cal. 537, 21 Pac. 960, 12 Am. St. Rep. 172, relied on by the appellant. In that case there had been a tax sale under a law which allowed a fixed period of time for redemption. After the sale the law (Pol. Code, § 3785) was amended by the insertion of the provision above discussed requiring the purchaser to give 30 days' notice of his intention to apply for a deed, and extending the time for redemption until such notice was given. The court held, following Curtis v. Whitney, 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. Ed. 513, that this amendment was effective as to all applications for deeds made after the amendment. The ground upon which this was put was that it did not, as against the purchaser, extend the time for redemption. Such purchaser could still obtain his deed at the expiration of 12 months, provided he took the steps required by the statute. It rested entirely with him whether or not he chose to take these steps. It is argued that the case at bar is the converse of the Oullahan Case; that, if it be not an invasion of the purchaser's right to require him to give 30 days' notice in order to cut off the right of redemption, it is no invasion of the owner's right to take away the provision of notice. But the cases are not analogous. As was stated by this court in Allen v. Allen, 95 Cal. 187, 30 Pac. 213, 16 L. R. A. 646, in speaking of the ruling in Oullahan v. Sweeney: "This requirement (i. e. that of notice) was a mere incident to the right of the purchaser to receive a deed. It merely prescribed the manner in which he should proceed to demand the deed to which he was entitled." There was, as to him, simply a change in the procedure which he must follow in order to get his deed. But the situation of the owner, who is deprived of the notice, is different. Under the law as it stood at the date of sale he had 30 days after the service of notice in which to redeem, and during these 30 days he was the owner of the land, subject only to the lien of the state for taxes. After the amendment dispensing with the requirement of notice, his right of redemption ended, without notice to him, at a time very different from, and possibly earlier than, the time when it would have expired under the old law. And, as has been pointed out, his title was divested at the expiration of a fixed, instead of an indefinite, period. That these circumstances worked a substantial change in the rights which the owner had at the date of the sale seems clear.

Inasmuch as the plaintiff failed to prove the giving of the required notice, neither deed operated to convey W. H. Johnson's title to the state, and all of the instruments offered by plaintiff were properly excluded. This disposes of the appeal from the order denying a new trial.

On the appeal from the judgment it is urged that the court erred in granting to the defendants the affirmative relief asked by them in their cross-complaints. This contention is based on the view, expressed several times by this court, that in an action to quiet title a cross-complaint by a defendant who claims title in himself is not necessary. Wilson v. Madison, 55 Cal. 5; Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257, 22 Pac. 195; Mills v. Fletcher, 100 Cal. 142, 34 Pac. 637. If these cases have not been overruled, their authority has, as to the point under discussion, been seriously impaired by Islais, etc., Water Co. v. Allen, 132 Cal. 432, 64 Pac. 713. Furthermore, no objection seems to have been raised in the court below to the mode of pleading. The plaintiff did not attack the cross-complaints either by demurrer or by motion to strike out. He answered and went to trial on the merits. Under these circumstances, we think he should be held to have consented to the method of procedure which was followed, and that he cannot now be heard to make this objection, even if it could be conceded that there is any merit in the objection itself.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. INSURANCE—FIRE POLICIES—CONSTRUCTION—PROPERTY COVERED.

Plaintiffs' policies on a printing plant insured certain typesetting machines, etc., in terms, and defendants' policies covered "printing presses, stereotype machinery, and other fixed and movable machinery, implements, tools, furniture, and fixtures contained in the building of the insured," which policy also provided that the insuring company should not be liable under its policy for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount thereby insured would bear to the whole insurance covering the property. Held, that defendants' policies should be construed to cover the typesetting machines, and that both plaintiffs and defendants were bound to contribute to the payment of damages caused to such machines by fire.

2. SAME—RIGHTS OF INSURED—EXTENT OF RECOVERY.

Where several policies covering the same property provided that the insurer should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount covered by the policy should bear to the whole insurance on the property, each policy was a separate, independent contract of insurance, on which the insured could only recover such proportion of the loss as the particular insurer was liable for under such provision.

3. SAME—EXCESS PAYMENTS—RECOVERY—CONTRIBUTION.

Where several policies covered the same property, and each contained a proportionate liability clause, each contract was separate and independent, so that the payment by one of the insurers of a larger amount than it was bound to pay did not affect the liability of the other insurers for their proportion of the loss nor give to the insurer so paying a right to recover the excess from the other insurers.

4. SAME — ADJUSTMENT — APPORTIONMENT OF LOSS—CONTRACT—MISTAKE.

Plaintiffs and defendants insured the property of a publishing company under policies, all of which in fact covered certain typesetting machines with other property. After loss, the insurers jointly authorized an adjuster to adjust the loss with the insured and to apportion the same among the insurers as their policies might require. The adjuster fixed the total loss by agreement with the insured, and then on the mistaken theory that defendants' policies did not cover the typesetting machines, so apportioned the loss that plaintiffs were compelled to bear a larger proportion thereof than they were legally bound to do. Held, that the adjustment and apportionment constituted a new agreement, on which plaintiffs were liable to the insured for the amount apportioned against them, and hence plaintiffs were entitled to recover their excess payments from defendants.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company and another against the Palatine Insurance Company and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants entered upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint, and the refusal of plaintiffs to amend.

This action was one brought by two insurance companies against six other insurance companies, all of which companies, both plaintiffs and defendants, had insured by their several policies certain property of the Standard Publishing Company, also a defendant, against loss by fire. The policies issued by plaintiffs in terms covered "five typesetting machines, with fixtures and appurtenances thereunto belonging, contained in the said building of the said insured," and the policies issued by defendant companies in terms covered "printing presses, stereotyping machinery, and other fixed and movable machinery, implements, tools, furniture and fixtures contained in the building of the said insured." The policies of plaintiffs were each for $2,500, and the policies of the defendant companies were each for smaller amounts. Each policy contained a provision to the effect that the insuring company should not be liable under its policy for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount thereby insured should bear to the whole insurance covering said property. The property having been "damaged or destroyed" by fire, plaintiff and defendant companies "jointly authorized an adjuster of losses to act as their agent in adjusting and settling the loss with the defendant Standard Publishing Company." This adjuster, on behalf of the insurers, agreed with the insured that the total loss was $4,373.68, and that the loss on the typesetting machines was $2,859, and the loss on the other property $1,514.68. Upon the supposition and theory, induced "by inadvertence and mistake," that the policies of defendant companies did not by their terms cover the typesetting machines, said adjuster agreed with the insured, on behalf of all the companies, that plaintiffs would pay the whole loss thereon, viz., $2,859, and the defendant companies would pay, each in proportion to the amount of its policy, the loss on the other property, viz., $1,514.68. Upon the same supposition and theory, proofs of loss against all the companies were thereupon prepared by the adjuster, and executed and presented by the insured in accord with the terms of said agreement. The defendant companies forthwith paid the amounts stated in said proofs of loss and claimed from them, and received from the insured releases in full of all liability in respect of said loss. The typesetting machines were machinery contained in the building of insured, and it is claimed that they were covered by the description of property insured contained in the policies of the defendant companies, and that such companies were liable to the insured for a proportionate part of the loss thereon. Neither plaintiffs nor insured knew of the mistake of the adjuster at the time of the payment by and release of defendants, nor until a long time thereafter. Upon discovery of the facts, plaintiffs demanded of defendants that the adjustment be reformed, and that they contribute to the payment of the loss upon the typesetting machines, which they refused to do. It is alleged that thereafter "the plaintiffs were compelled to and did pay the said insured," the whole of the loss on said typesetting machines, $2,859, each paying one-half, and the defendants have not contributed or paid plaintiffs any portion thereof.

This is the case made by the complaint. Upon these facts, plaintiffs asked that the adjustment be set aside and reformed, that an accounting be had between plaintiffs and defendants in respect to the amount of said loss and the moneys paid and which should be paid by the several plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, and that defendant companies be required to pay plaintiffs such proportion of the loss on the typesetting machines as was due the insured from them under the terms of their respective policies. We think there can be no doubt, under the allegations of the complaint, that the policies of the defendant companies, by their terms, covered the typesetting machines. There can be no question as to the fact that if plaintiffs' policies had not been issued at all, the broad terms of defendants' policies would necessarily have included not only the property specifically mentioned, but also all other fixed and movable machinery contained in the building of insured, for it is so expressly declared thereby. The language could not have been more inclusive. The mere fact that plaintiffs' policies were limited in terms to a portion of the property not specifically mentioned in defendants' policies, and only included in the general designation of machinery, does not authorize us to exclude from defendants' policies property coming clearly within their provisions. There was no connection between the contracts of plaintiffs and defendants. Each of the companies had a separate, independent contract with the insured, which must be separately construed. Defendants' contracts were clear and free from ambiguity so far as the descriptions of property insured were concerned, and must be read according to their terms, regardless of the manner of description used in other contracts to which defendants were not parties.

Defendants' policies, therefore, covered not only the property other than typesetting machines, but also, concurrently with those of plaintiffs, covered such machines. Under the pro rata clause contained in all the policies, each of the insurers, plaintiffs and defendants, was originally liable to the insured for such proportion of the loss on such machines as the amount of the insurance thereon bore to the whole of the insurance covering the same. Plaintiffs have, therefore, in paying to insured the whole amount of the loss on the typesetting machines, paid not only the amounts for which they were liable under their policies, but also the amounts for which defendants were liable under their policies. If this were all, whatever might be said as to moral reasons in favor of the reimbursement of plaintiffs by defendants, plaintiffs would have no legal cause of action against defendants. It is well settled that there is no right of contribution among insurers whose policies contain such a clause. Each of the contracts of insurance is entirely separate and independent of all the others. Each insurer is liable directly to the insured for its proportion of the loss, and the insured can recover from any insurer only such proportion of the loss as it is liable for under the terms of its policy. The payment by one of such insurers of a larger amount than it is bound to pay in no way affects the liability of the other insurers for their proportion of the loss, and gives the party so paying no right to recover the excess so paid from the other insurers. See 4 Cooley's Briefs on Laws of Ins. 3099, 3108, 3862; Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 77 Md. 64, 25 Atl. 989, 27 Atl. 314, 39 Am. St. Rep. 386; Good v. Buckeye, etc., Co. (Ohio) 2 N. E. 420.

We are of the opinion, however, that the contract made by the insurers for the payment of the loss materially changed the situation. The insurers came together for the purpose, both of determining the amount of loss, and apportioning the same among themselves as their policies might require. It was immaterial whether they did this each by its own agent, or by a common agent jointly authorized to act for all. Having determined the total amount of loss satisfactorily to the insured and to themselves, they jointly agreed with the insured as to the respective amounts each insurer should pay. It was entirely immaterial to the insured in what proportion the various insurers paid, as long as the aggregate amount paid equaled the total loss. The insured was at liberty to accept whatever apportionment of liability the insurers jointly proposed, regardless of its own views as to whether thereunder each company was paying its proper proportion. If the insured was satisfied with the apportionment made, that was a matter which only concerned the insurers among themselves, and it is immaterial whether or not the insured believed each company was paying its proper proportion. Any mistaken theory of the insured in that behalf would not affect the validity of the settlement as to it, so long as it was satisfied therewith. It had the right to accept the joint proposition of the insurers as to the amount each should pay, and when it accepted it, the adjustment and apportionment of liability constituted as to it a new agreement, upon which it was entitled to rely, and upon which a separate action might have been maintained against each insurer for the amount it had promised to pay thereunder. See Stockton, etc., Works v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 557, 569, 33 Pac. 633. In view of the allegations of the complaint, we can conceive of no defense that could have been successfully made by plaintiffs here to an action by the insured against them, based on such agreement jointly made by all the insurers, and relying upon which the insured had made his demands against the various insurers, and had released the defendants upon payment by them of the amounts agreed upon as to them. Solely by reason of that agreement (which as to apportionment was one among the insurers, as well as one with the insured), plaintiffs were compelled to pay to insured amounts for which they were not liable under their policies, and for which defendants were liable. This burden was imposed upon them by the agreement to which all the insurers were parties, and, according to the allegations of the complaint, was entirely the result of inadvertence and mistake on the part of all the insurers. It was the intention of all the insurers to apportion the liability among themselves in accord with the terms of the respective policies, and it was inadvertently and mistakenly supposed and assumed by all the insurers, in the person of their common agent, that defendants' policies did not cover the typesetting machines, and for that reason alone the whole loss thereon was apportioned to plaintiffs. Solely in consequence of this mutual mistake on the part of the insurers, plaintiffs were compelled to pay the insured moneys for which they were not liable under their policies and for which defendants were liable. We know of no good reason why relief may not be obtained against the defendants from the results of such a mistake, entirely independent of any doctrine of assignment, contribution or equitable subrogation, and none, in our opinion, is given in the brief of learned counsel for defendants. As said by their counsel, plaintiffs, according to their complaint, have a standing in equity as original parties to a contract entered into under mutual mistake of all the parties, to be relieved from the unjust and inequitable burden to which they have been subjected through such mistake, and to be restored, so far as they can be without injury to innocent persons, to the position they would have occupied had it not been for such mistake.

We are of the opinion that the complaint sufficiently states a cause of action as against a general demurrer.

JACKS v. DEERING. (S. F. 4,029.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1907.)

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE—MENTAL CAPACITY OF MORTGAGOR.

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage it was found that, when she executed the mortgage, the mortgagor was a person of unsound mind, "but was not entirely without understanding," and that "she did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature, purpose, and effect of the transaction"; that she lived two years thereafter; that there was full consideration for the mortgage; that the mortgagee acted in good faith; that the mortgagor's daughter represented her as being fully capable to transact business; that her attorney, who, after her death, became her administrator, was informed of the transaction at the time; and that no attempt at a rescission was ever commenced. Held, that the case was not within Civ. Code, § 38, providing that a person "entirely without understanding" has no power to contract, but within section 39, providing that a contract of a person of unsound mind, but not "entirely without understanding," is subject to rescission, so that the mortgagor was entitled to foreclosure.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Jackson Hatch and James H. Deering, for appellant. Bishop, Wheeler & Hoefler and Bishop & Hoefler (William Rix, of counsel), for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is the second appeal. The first appeal will be found reported in Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 507, 73 Pac. 247, Mr. Estee having died, and Mr. Deering having been substituted as administrator in his place.

Some of the facts are set forth in the opinion above cited. Others will be noticed as may be necessary. Section 38 of the Civil Code provides: "A person entirely without understanding has no power to make a contract of any kind, but he is liable for the reasonable value of things furnished to him necessary for his support or for the support of his family." Section 39 of the same Code provides: "A conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission as provided in the chapter on rescission of this act." Upon the trial of the case the judge made the following finding touching the mortgagor's mental soundness: "That Maria T. Divine, on June 1, 1896, the time when she executed the promissory note and mortgage to the defendant, was over the age of 85 years; that she was then, and for several years prior thereto had been, physically very infirm; that at the time of the execution of the promissory note and mortgage her mental capacity had become greatly impaired, such impairment having commenced and continued several years prior to that time; that she was then a person of unsound mind, but was not entirely without understanding, nor has her incapacity been judicially determined; that at the time of her execution of the said promissory note and mortgage she did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature, purpose and effect of the transaction in which she was engaged, or of the promissory note and mortgage; that from that time until her death the impairment of her physical and mental capacities continuously increased." The court also found: "That Maria T. Divine lived for about two years after the execution and delivery by her of the said note and mortgage, and that she did not at any time after the execution and delivery of said note and mortgage, exercise, or attempt to exercise, the right of rescinding said note or mortgage. That within a few days after the date of the note and mortgage, Morris M. Estee was informed of the fact that said note and mortgage had been executed and delivered by Maria T. Divine to plaintiff, and at such time he also knew the mental condition of Maria T. Divine; and at the time of his appointment as administrator, he well knew the fact of the execution and delivery by Maria T. Divine of the said note and mortgage to plaintiff, and all the facts concerning that transaction, and the mental condition of the said Maria T. Divine at the time of such transaction, and that the plaintiff had satisfied and canceled the said note and mortgage of Lillie T. Sparks. That, from the date of the appointment of Morris M. Estee as such administrator, there was no offer or attempt on his part as such administrator to rescind the said note and mortgage."

Appellants invoke the law of the case, and insist that, notwithstanding the findings here made, the case is identical with that presented upon the former appeal, where it was held that, under the findings, the note and mortgage did not constitute a contract, by reason of the mental incapacity of the mortgagor. In this, however, appellants are in error. It will be noted that the discussion in Jacks v. Estee recognizes the failure of the court to find whether or not Mrs. Divine was "entirely without understanding" and declares "the findings do not go so far as this," but find only her incapacity to understand or comprehend the particular transaction in question. In the absence of this finding it will be noted that the language of the learned commissioner is not couched in terms of a judicial decision but is limited to "inferences" and "suppositions." It declares that the question is "whether it may be inferred from the findings taken together that it was the intention of the court to find a general incapacity in the intestate." An inference which might be drawn from a given finding cannot be allowed to stand against an express finding to the contrary of the inference. The opinion further declares that the finding of incapacity "seems necessarily to imply her incapacity to understand such transactions in general." Again, it is said, "There is, indeed, a finding that Mrs. Divine was not insane," and "this seems to be in conflict with the findings we have been considering," "but we must suppose," etc. Thus the discussion in Jacks v. Estee was addressed to a condition of the record not here existing, to a record which contained no findings upon a matter as to which the record appealed from here is full and complete. It is apparent that the learned trial judge, with sections 38 and 39 of the Civil Code, and the discussion of the findings upon the first appeal all before him, made the findings above set forth, for the very purpose of relieving from the necessity of any speculation, supposition, or implication as to the exact facts and the meaning thereof which he meant to declare. And the findings as now presented are not only essentially different from those upon the former appeal, but forbid in their direct completeness the need of supposition and implication. The finding that Mrs. Divine did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature, purpose, and effect of the transaction stands consistently with the added finding that she was not entirely without understanding on the particular matter of the contract. There is here not only no conflict in the findings, but no lack of harmony in the court's utterances. The declaration is in the conjunctive, that she did not understand the nature, purpose, and effect. Had she been entirely without understanding, the finding should have been, and, drawn by so learned a judge as he who tried this case, would have been, in the disjunctive, and would have declared that she understood neither the nature nor purpose nor effect. As announced by the court, the declaration is consistent with a partial understanding, with the statement that she might have known fully the nature and purpose and might not have fully understood the effect, or that she might have understood, though imperfectly, the nature, purpose and effect. This being so, the findings bring the case within the purview of section 39, where a rescission was necessary. There is no question in this case but that the mortgagee parted with full value for his mortgage, surrendering and canceling, as he did, the promissory note secured by a mortgage of Mrs. Sparks, the daughter of Mrs. Divine, and paying additionally the sum of $221.55. The good faith of the mortgagee and his ignorance of Mrs. Divine's condition is not only established, but it is shown that Mrs. Sparks represented her mother as being fully capable to transact business. Moreover, Mr. Estee, an attorney at law and the legal adviser of Mrs. Divine, was at once made aware of the transaction. Mrs. Divine lived for some time afterwards, and, upon her death, Mr. Estee became administrator of her estate. Neither during her lifetime nor after her death was any attempt at a rescission ever made.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 4, 1907.)

1. Exceptions, Bill of—Settlement—Service—Default—Belief.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, provides that the court may relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him because of his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, where the application for relief is made within a reasonable time, and in no case exceeding six months. Held, that where defendant's bill of exceptions was not served in time through excusable neglect, and the bill came up for settlement within a few days after the expiration of six months from the time defendant should have served her proposed bill, and after six months from the day it was actually served, at which time plaintiffs objected to the settlement of the bill because it had not been served in time, the mere reservation of plaintiffs' objection at the time of service did not constitute "a proceeding," within the statute; and that defendants were entitled to apply for relief at the time the objection based on their default was presented to the court in the proceeding for settlement or within a reasonable time thereafter.

2. Appeal — Order Granting New Trial — Review.

Where one of the grounds specified in the notice for a new trial was insufficiency of the evidence, and the order granting the motion was general, it would be assumed on appeal, in favor of the order, that it was granted for insufficiency of the evidence, if it could have been legally granted on that ground, regardless of any reason stated in the opinion of the trial court.

3. New Trial—Insufficiency of Evidence—Conflicting Evidence.

A trial judge is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence on appeal, in determining an application for a new trial; but it is his duty to grant such application if he is not satisfied with the verdict or findings.

4. Appeal—Presumptions—New Trial.

Where the evidence was such that it would have supported findings in favor of the party against whom the decision was given, and the trial court granted a motion for a new trial made on various grounds, including insufficiency of evidence, without in terms excluding such ground, the Supreme Court on appeal is bound to presume that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence, and reached a conclusion on the hearing of the motion favorable to the applicant.

5. New Trial—Findings—Review.

On an application for a new trial for insufficiency of evidence, the trial court, in determining whether the assailed findings were sufficiently supported by the evidence, was not required to accept as true other findings of fact not assailed by specification of insufficiency, which facts were such as to make the findings assailed mere conclusions of law.

6. Gaming—Purchase of Stocks on Margins—Power of Sale.

Plaintiffs were employed as the agents of defendant's testator to purchase certain stock for him, and to advance the purchase price; he agreeing to repay that amount with commissions and interest. Testator deposited with plaintiffs, as security for such payment, 350 shares of stock which he then held, and it was also agreed that plaintiffs should hold the stock purchased as further security. Held, that such facts were sufficient to justify a finding that plaintiffs were thereby authorized to sell the stocks at any time in order to protect themselves against a decline in value, and that the contract therefore constituted a purchase of stocks on margins, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 26.

7. Evidence—Admission Against Interest—Claims Against Estate.

A verified statement of claim against a testator's estate is not in the nature of a pleading in an action, and is admissible against the claimant as an admission against interest, where a different claim is subsequently filed on which an action against the executor is based.

8. Executors—Claims—Variance.

A claim filed against testator's estate alleged that testator agreed to repay to plaintiffs certain advances made by them in the purchase of certain stock and the usual commissions for the purchase within 90 days from the date of the agreement, with interest on the amount thereof from the date of the advance until paid at 6 per cent. per annum. The court found that there was no agreement as to the time of payment, nor as to interest. Held, that such variance between the claim and complaint and the proof was not material.

9. Gaming—Margins—Recovery of Advances—Complaint.

Plaintiffs' claim against testator's estate alleged that testator employed plaintiffs as his agents to purchase certain stock for him, they to advance the purchase price, which he agreed to repay within 90 days, with commissions and interest; that testator deposited with plaintiffs, as security for the payment, 350 shares of stock, and agreed that plaintiffs should hold the stock purchased as further security. The claim also alleged the delivery of all the stock in pledge. Held, that such claim for advances, etc., on its face did not show as a matter of law that the contract was a gambling transaction in margins, prohibited by Const. art. 4, § 26.

10. Executors and Administrators—Claims Against Estate.

A claim against an estate is not required to state the facts with the preciseness and detail required in a complaint, and the sufficiency of such claim is not to be tested by the rules applicable to pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 811.]

11. Pleading—Variance—Amendment.

Plaintiffs sued testator's executrix to recover certain advances made by them in the purchase of certain stock for testator, alleging that the latter agreed to repay the same, with commissions and interest, within 90 days. The court found that there was no agreement as to the time of payment, nor as to the payment of any interest, and that, on the day succeeding that on which the stock was purchased and delivered to testator, he voluntarily and without any request on plaintiffs' part deposited the stock so purchased and certain additional shares as security for the advancement. Held that, though the variances between the complaint and the proof were such as to have actually misled defendant in maintaining her defense on the merits, they were not such as to constitute a failure of proof, and hence plaintiffs might properly have been granted an amendment on terms as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

12. Appeal—Disposition of Cause—Reversal—New Trial.

Where the Supreme Court on appeal was satisfied that the judgment was erroneous, but the record was insufficient to enable the court to determine the ultimate rights of the parties, it was authorized on reversal, by Code Civ Proc. § 53, to order a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Albert G. Burnett, Judge.

Action by Edward Pollitz and others, as copartners, against Mary C. Wickersham, as executrix. From a judgment denying plaintiffs any relief, and from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Judgment reversed. Order granting new trial affirmed.

Heller & Powers, Edmund Tauszky, and A. A. Moore, for appellants. Lippitt & Lippitt and Campbell, Metson & Campbell (Thomas H. Breeze, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was one brought by plaintiffs, who were stock brokers, to obtain a decree adjudging that the estate of Frederick A. Wickersham, deceased, is indebted to them in the sum of $33,514.55 with interest, for moneys advanced by them in the purchase for said Wickersham of 500 shares of the stock of the Honokaa Sugar Company, a corporation, and 500 shares of the stock of the Paauhau Sugar Plantation Company, a corporation, and directing the sale of said stock, together with 350 other shares of the Honokaa Company belonging to Wickersham, all of which was alleged to be held in pledge as security by plaintiff, and the application of the proceeds to the debt, and adjudging the payment in due course of administration of any deficiency that may remain after such sale. The original answer contained denials of the allegations of the complaint as to the transaction between plaintiffs and defendant's intestate, but contained no affirmative defense. It, however, included allegations "by way of cross-complaint, and asking for affirmative relief," to the effect that the transaction between the parties was one for the purchase and sale of shares of stock of corporations "on margin, or to be delivered at a future day," and therefore one within the prohibition contained in section 26 of article 4 of our Constitution, where it is decleared that: "All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin, or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void, and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction." Judgment was asked by defendant declaring the agreement to pay made by Wickersham null and void, and for the recovery of the 350 shares of stock held as partial security. By her second amended cross-complaint, the same matters were set up; defendant's prayer, however, being simply for the return of the 350 shares, and damages for the detention thereof. Plaintiffs by answer denied the allegations of the cross-complaint in this regard. The findings of the trial court were in favor of plaintiffs upon all the issues made by complaint, answer, cross-complaint, and the answer thereto, except upon the single issue as to the presentation to the executrix by plaintiffs before action of their claim against deceased. As to this issue, the trial court included in its findings a copy of the claim actually presented, and concluded therefrom that "the facts proven by plaintiffs herein and found by the court do not correspond with the claim presented by plaintiffs to defendant, and that there is a material variance between the facts as set forth in said claim and * * * in the complaint, and the facts proven by plaintiffs and found by the court." On this ground alone, judgment was given that plaintiffs take nothing; the judgment also being that defendant take nothing by her cross-complaint. Defendant moved for a new trial of the issues of fact arising upon her second amended cross-complaint and the answer of plaintiffs thereto, and an order was made granting such motion. Plaintiffs appeal from that portion of the judgment denying them any relief, and also from the order granting defendant's motion for a new trial. The appeal from the judgment is upon the judgment roll alone, and the appeal from the order is before us upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions procured by plaintiff to be settled upon the granting of the motion.

We shall first consider the appeal from the order granting a new trial. By the bill of exceptions settled for use on this appeal, it is made to appear that the grounds of motion for a new trial were such as could be presented only by a bill of exceptions or statement on motion for a new trial, and the notice of motion stated that the motion would be made solely on the bill of exceptions. If defendant's bill of exceptions which was used upon the hearing of the motion could not properly be considered thereon, no reason for a new trial was made to appear, and the order should be reversed. Defendant's proposed bill of exceptions was not served until some days after the expiration of the time prescribed by law. Plaintiffs, at the time of such service, reserved the objection that the bill was served too late. The bill came up for settlement on December 5, 1904, which was a few days after the expiration of six months from the time defendant should have served her proposed bill, and one day after the expiration of six months from the time of actual service thereof, June 4, 1904. Plaintiffs objected to the settlement on the ground that the bill had not been served in time. Defendant thereupon made by affidavits a showing for relief, on the ground of excusable neglect, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., which was met by a counter affidavit on the part of plaintiffs. The trial court ruled that the default of defendant in preparing and serving the bill was due to excusable neglect, and that a sufficient case had been made to entitle her to relief, and thereupon settled the bill. Objection to the use of the bill was subsequently made on the hearing of the motion for a new trial, and overruled.

The showing as to excusable neglect was such that it cannot be held that the trial court erred in relieving defendant from the effect of her default, if it then had the power to grant such relief. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc., providing that the court may relieve a party "from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," in terms limits the cases in which such relief may be granted to those wherein the application for relief is made within a reasonable time, and in no case "exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding was taken." As already noted, the application here was not made until more than six months after defendant's default, and the actual service of the bill. It is claimed by plaintiffs with much force that the application was in fact for relief from her failure to serve the bill in time, and, such failure having occurred more than six months before the application, the court was without power to grant the relief. We find, however, that this court has given a different construction to the statutory provision. In holding that relief may be given, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., from the effect of the failure to take in time a necessary step in the matter of procuring a bill to be settled, this court, basing its conclusion upon the fact that, under the statute, relief can be had only "from a judgment, order or other proceedings taken against" a party, has said that the relief sought is from some proceeding taken by the adverse party based upon the default, or from some order of the court based thereon. Thus, in Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 332, the first case in which section 473, Code Civ. Proc., was declared applicable to such matters, it was held that the objection made to a settlement of a proposed bill, on the ground that it was not served in time, was a step in the action to obtain the interposition of the court, which amounted to a proceeding against the appellants within the letter and spirit of the section, and that it is from this proceeding that the appellants asked and the court had power to grant relief. In Banta v. Siler, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935, the application was for relief from an order refusing to settle the statement on objection made thereto, and this court affirmed the action of the trial court in granting such relief, and settling the statement. These cases give a construction to the statutory provision that we would not feel justified in departing from, to the prejudice of a litigant who has relied thereon. We see no reason why one who finds himself in default in such a matter may not anticipate the objection or proceeding to be taken against him based thereon, and make his application for relief at once (see Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. Co. [Cal. Sup.] 82 Pac. 53); but, in view of the decisions above cited, we do not feel warranted in holding that the application comes too late, if made at the time the objection based on the default is presented to the court, or within a reasonable time thereafter. We are satisfied that the mere reservation of their objection by plaintiffs at the time of the service of the bill did not constitute a "proceeding" within the meaning of the statute. We conclude, therefore, that the bill of exceptions was properly settled, and entitled to be considered on the motion for a new trial.

The order granting the motion for a new trial was in general terms, not purporting to exclude any particular ground specified in the notice. One of the grounds specified in the notice was insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. If, upon the record before us, a new trial could have been properly granted upon that ground, we must assume in favor of the order that it was granted for that reason, regardless of any reason stated in the opinion of the trial court. See Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 659, 73 Pac. 449; Ben Lomond, etc., Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 621, 75 Pac. 332; Weisser v. S. P. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 83 Pac. 439. "It is the duty of the judge of the trial court to grant the new trial whenever he is not satisfied with the verdict if tried by a jury, or with the findings, if tried by the court; and he is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence, as is this court." Condee v. Gyger, 126 Cal. 546, 547, 59 Pac. 26; Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 355, 362, 59 Pac. 791. Where the evidence is such that it would have sufficiently supported findings in favor of the party against whom the decision was given, and the trial court grants a motion for new trial made upon various grounds, including that of insufficiency of evidence, without in terms excluding such ground in its order entered on the minutes, we must presume, in favor of such order, "that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence, and reached a conclusion upon the hearing of the motion, favorable" to the party making the motion. Condee v. Gyger, 126 Cal. 546, 548, 59 Pac. 26. As a matter of fact, the opinion of the trial judge filed upon the decision of the motion shows that such was the case here. It is the reason given by the learned judge for such change that counsel for appellant vigorously assail.

The real question in dispute between the parties on the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto was as to whether the transaction between plaintiffs and Wickersham, upon which each party based its action, was one prohibited by the constitutional provision hereinbefore quoted, and therefore void. The specifications of insufficiency of evidence contained in the bill of exceptions sufficiently assailed the material findings in this regard. In determining the question as to whether the assailed findings were sufficiently supported by the evidence, the trial court undoubtedly had the right to consider all the evidence given upon the trial, including that given on behalf of plaintiffs in support of their claim. That evidence as to the nature of the transaction between the parties was as available to defendant in support of her cross-action involving the same transaction, as it was to plaintiffs in support of their action, and she had a perfect right to rest her claim thereon if she so desired.

Nor do we understand that, as urged by plaintiffs, the trial court, in the determination of the question as to whether the assailed findings were sufficiently supported by the evidence, was required to accept as true certain other findings of probative facts not assailed by specification of insufficiency, which probative facts were not such as to make of the findings assailed mere conclusions of law rather than findings of the ultimate facts. The question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the assailed findings is to be determined solely from the admissions of the pleadings and the evidence given upon the trial.

Coming to a consideration of these matters, we find sufficient ground for sustaining the action of the lower court in granting a new trial. The evidence was such as to warrant the trial court in concluding that the facts were in no material respect different from those in Parker v. Otis, 130 Cal. 322, 330, 62 Pac. 571, 927, 92 Am. St. Rep. 56, where the transaction was pronounced to be similar to that involved in Sheehy v. Shinn, 103 Cal. 325, 37 Pac. 393, Kullman v. Simmens, 104 Cal. 595, 38 Pac. 362, and kindred cases, and therefore prohibited by the constitutional provision. The facts, as briefly stated by this court in that case, were as follows: "Plaintiff paid to defendants certain money, accompanied by an order to purchase certain stocks. Defendants went into the stock board, bought and paid for these stocks in full at the market rate. Defendants then credited plaintiff with the money paid by him [which was always less than the amount paid for the stocks by defendants, or, in other words, was but a margin of the cost], and by agreement held the stock as security for their commissions, advances, and for the accumulating interest thereon, with the power to sell the stocks to protect themselves against a decline in value. Defendants did not keep the particular stocks purchased, but had others of like character, and could and would have delivered a like number of shares to plaintiff upon full payment of all balances due at the time upon demand. Defendants acted only as agents of plaintiff, and had no interest in the stocks beyond their commissions, advances, and the agreed interest." In the case at bar, Wickersham did not pay any portion of the purchase price, but his deposit of the 350 shares of stock as collateral security had the same effect, and afforded the necessary margin. See Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 373, 378, 379, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511, 23 Am. St. Rep. 482. It is said that plaintiffs here did not have power to sell the stocks at any time to protect themselves against a decline in value, and that therefore one of the essential elements of a sale on margin was absent. We are of the opinion that the evidence was such as to fully warrant the inference that such power to sell was present. Plaintiffs' contention to the contrary is based entirely upon the theory that Wickersham had become the owner of the 1,000 shares, and as such owner had delivered the same in pledge; but the evidence was not such as to compel the court to accept such theory. According to the evidence of one of plaintiffs' witnesses, Wickersham had stated to him that, after the stock had depreciated, he had gone to plaintiffs and told them not to sell him out, and that they had promised that they would not, thus indicating his understanding of their agreement to be that they had the power to sell. There was nothing in the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses, as to statements made by Wickersham to them as to his transaction with plaintiffs, to compel a conclusion contrary to that reached by the court below on the motion for a new trial. The creditors' claim based on this transaction first presented by plaintiffs to defendant's executrix for allowance, verified by the oath of one of the plaintiffs, stated the facts in such a way as to clearly and necessarily bring the transaction within the constitutional prohibition, and this, as we shall presently show, was competent evidence of admission against interest.

Plaintiffs rely on Maurer v. King, 127 Cal. 114, 59 Pac. 290, as establishing that in this case there was no contract for the delivery of stock at a future day; but we cannot see that the case is in point. In part payment of the purchase price for certain real property, one Smith had delivered to Maurer 1,000 shares of the stock of a mining company at 50 cents per share, making $500 thus paid, and, to save Maurer from loss on the stock, guarantied in writing that it would be worth that sum inside of two years from date, and, if Maurer held it for two years and so requested, he (Smith) would take it from him and pay him for it at that rate. This guaranty was upheld. It was said that there was here no contract prohibited by the letter of the constitutional inhibition, nor any attempted evasion thereof, but a simple guaranty that property delivered in payment at a fixed price would be worth that price within two years, and, if not worth it, that the party delivering it would take it back, and pay the amount in cash. It is manifest that the case in no degree assists plaintiffs.

It is not necessary for us on this appeal to go further than to hold that the evidence was such that it would have sufficiently supported findings in favor of defendant upon the question as to the nature of the transaction between plaintiffs and Wickersham. As to this, we have no doubt.

It is earnestly claimed that the creditors' claim first presented by plaintiffs to defendant for allowance was not admissible as evidence of admission against interest on the part of plaintiffs. After the rejection of this claim by defendant, a second claim in different terms was presented, and it was this claim that was in fact relied upon by plaintiffs on the trial of the action. The verified statement as to the nature of the transaction contained in the first claim was undoubtedly opposed to the claim made by plaintiffs on the trial. Ordinarily, where one has made statements opposed to the claim he asserts in an action, these statements are admissible against him as admissions against interest. Their force as admissions may be impaired, and perhaps entirely destroyed, by explanation of the circumstances under which they were made; but they are admissible, and are to be considered in connection with such explanations as may be made concerning them. We know of no principle under which the claim could be held inadmissible here. Plaintiffs seek to bring the case within the rule established in this state to the effect that, where a party to an action amends a pleading, statements in the superseded pleading cannot be used as admissions against interest on the part of the person making them. See Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 154, 165; Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 222; Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 126, 128, 11 Pac. 871; Ralphs v. Hensler, 114 Cal. 196, 198, 45 Pac. 1062; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 316, 46 Pac. 1076. This rule, the soundness of which has been disputed elsewhere (see 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1067), has never been held applicable, except as to statements in a pleading in an action, which have been omitted by amendments made thereto, and we can see no good reason for extending it. Clearly, a creditor's claim against an estate is in no sense of the word a pleading, nor is there any such thing known to our law as the amendment of such a claim. The fact that such a claim must be presented prior to the institution of an action against an estate is entirely immaterial. The case is simply that of one who has presented a bill or demand embodying certain statements as to the facts upon which it is founded, and who subsequently seeks to maintain an action utterly inconsistent with the facts he has heretofore asserted. We can conceive of no good reason why the general rule as to the admissibility of evidence of admissions against interest was not applicable in the case of the claim under discussion.

From what has been said, it follows that the order granting the new trial must be affirmed.

As to the appeal from the judgment: We are unable to agree with the learned judge of the trial court in his conclusion that there was such a veriance between the facts as set forth in the second claim presented against the estate and in the complaint, and the facts proven by plaintiffs and found by the court, as to preclude a recovery. There was no substantial variance between the facts set forth in the claim and those alleged in the first count of plaintiffs' complaint. It was alleged therein that Wickersham agreed to repay to plaintiffs the advances made by them in the purchase of said stock, and the usual commissions for the purchase, within 90 days from the date of the agreement, with interest on the amount thereof, from the date of the advance until paid, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and the court found that there was no agreement as to the time of payment, and no agreement as to the payment of any interest. These variances between the complaint and the findings are not claimed to be material.

The claim and complaint allege the transaction between the parties to have been fully had on March 5, 1901, and substantially allege the transaction to have been that plaintiffs were employed by Wickersham as his agents to purchase the stock for him, they to advance for him the purchase price, which he agreed to repay within 90 days with commissions and interest; and that he deposited with plaintiffs as security for the payment his 350 shares of stock; and that it was agreed that plaintiffs should also hold the 1,000 shares of stock purchased by them as security. The complaint further alleged the delivery of the 1,350 shares in pledge. The trial court found that the 1,000 shares were ordered by Wickersham on March 5, 1901, and on that day purchased and delivered by plaintiffs to Wickersham, they advancing the purchase price; and that Wickersham then agreed to repay said amount and broker's commissions; and that, on the next day, he voluntarily and without any request on the part of plaintiffs, deposited as security his 350 shares, and then agreed with plaintiffs that they should also hold the 1,000 shares purchased as additional security, and thereupon delivered to plaintiffs the whole 1,350 shares in pledge. The court further found that Wickersham purchased the stock in good faith as an investment, and that it was contemplated between the parties that Wickersham would soon pay his indebtedness and take up the stock. It is claimed by defendant that, if the findings of the court show a state of facts upon which plaintiffs could recover at all, it was due solely to the facts stated therein which were not alleged in the claim—that the allegations of the claim taken alone, not stating the elements of fact which took it from the operation of the constitutional prohibition already discussed, showed a case within that prohibition, and therefore that the claim was void on its face. We are unable to assent to the proposition that the claim presented established by its allegations its own invalidity, and this, undoubtedly, was the view of the trial court in overruling a general demurrer to the complaint, stating substantially the same facts as those stated in the claim. The claim read fair enough upon its face, not stating facts which necessarily put it under the ban of the Constitution. Whether the transaction was, in fact, in contravention of the constitutional provision, was a question of fact that could only be determined by a consideration of the circumstances under which it was had, and the conduct of the parties in reference thereto (see Kullman v. Simmens, 104 Cal. 595, 599, 38 Pac. 362), and plaintiffs were not required to show those circumstances in their claim. It is not required that a claim against an estate should state the facts with all the preciseness and detail required in a complaint, and the sufficiency of such a claim is not to be tested by the rules applicable to pleadings. It should, of course, as said in McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 83, 42 Pac. 466, 468, "sufficiently indicate the nature and amount of the demand to enable the executor and judge in probate to act advisedly upon it," and this, we think, the claim in question did. Undoubtedly, the cause of action established by the findings is precisely the cause of action attempted to be set out in the claim and in the complaint. By all, the claim asserted was one for money advanced by plaintiffs to the use of Wickersham, which he had agreed to repay. The case came fully up to the requirements of the rule declared in Lichtenberg v. McGlynn, 105 Cal. 47, 38 Pac. 541, McGrath v. Carroll, supra, and kindred cases, to the effect that a plaintiff can recover only upon the claim which has been presented and rejected, and cannot recover upon any other cause of action. See, also, Thompson v. Orena, 134 Cal. 26, 66 Pac. 24.

Even if the variances between the allegations of the complaint and the proof were such as to have actually misled the defendant to her prejudice in maintaining her defense upon the merits, they could not be held to be such as to constitute the case one of failure of proof under section 471 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and full and adequate remedy could have been afforded both parties by an order of amendment of the complainant upon such terms as might be just. Section 469, Code Civ. Proc. It cannot be held that the facts actually found by the court showed a transaction within the constitutional inhibition.

We have discussed the points made by defendant in support of the judgment, and are of the opinion that the same are not sustainable. In reversing the judgment we are satisfied that a new trial of the issues made by the complaint and the answer should be ordered. That the power to so order a new trial under the circumstances here existing is vested in this court there can be no doubt. See Code Civ. Proc. § 53; Schroeder v. Schweizer, etc., 60 Cal. 467, 471, 44 Am. Rep. 61; Merrill v. First Nat. Bank, 94 Cal. 59, 29 Pac. 242. This is eminently a proper case for the exercise of that power. It would be a most peculiar and unjust conclusion of this action, should it be finally adjudged herein that plaintiffs should recover a balance due them upon the contract between them and Wickersham, on the theory that the contract was valid, and that the defendant should recover property of Wickersham held by plaintiffs as security for the performance of the same contract, upon the theory that the contract was void, and yet such might be the result were we to order judgment for plaintiffs on the findings. The real question is as to the nature of the transaction had between plaintiffs and Wickersham, and the final determination of that question must settle all the claims involved in this action. The case here is precisely like that of Schroeder v. Schweizer, etc., supra, in that the respondent, obtaining judgment on the findings as they stood, was not called upon to except to them in the lower court or to bring up the evidence by bill of exceptions to show that they were not sustained thereby. Unless this court can satisfy itself from the record as to the ultimate rights of the parties, it will not undertake in reversing a judgment to finally settle the same.

The portion of the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, with leave to the parties to amend their respective pleadings as they may be advised. The order granting defendant's motion for a new trial of the issues arising upon defendant's second amended cross-complaint and the answer of plaintiffs thereto is affirmed.

(S. F. 3,842.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1907.)

1. TRIAL — INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE — RENEWAL OF OFFER AFTER AMENDMENT—NECESSITY.

Where the trial court refused to admit in evidence the contract upon which plaintiff sued, treating it as void, and, in granting plaintiff leave to amend its petition, declared that no change in pleading could affect the court's construction of the contract, plaintiff's submission of the case to the jury without renewing his offer to introduce the contract after the amendment of its complaint did not preclude it from basing error on the exclusion.

2. CORPORATIONS—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS—WRITTEN CONTRACTS—PROOF OF SIGNATURE —NECESSITY.

Where plaintiff corporation sued upon a contract executed by its president, and no issue was raised as to his authority to sign it, plaintiff's demand for performance of the contract was sufficient ratification to make proof of its signature unnecessary.

3. SALES—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—INTENT OF PARTIES.

A memorandum reciting that plaintiff had "bought of" defendants 750 tons of salt could not be treated as an executed contract, where it appeared from the whole contract and the circumstances surrounding its making that the writing was intended as an executory contract.

4. CONTRACTS—RULES OF CONSTRUCTION—FAVORING VALIDITY.

As between two permissible constructions, that which establishes a valid contract shall be preferred to that which does not.

5. SALES — CONTRACTS — CERTAINTY AND MUTUALITY.

A contract for the sale of 750 tons of salt was not void for uncertainty or want of mutuality because the buyer the right to order any one or all of the nine different grades specified in the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

W. F. Williamson, Wm. E. Kleinsorg, and Albert M. Johnson, for appellant. Walter M. Willett, Louis Titus, H. M. Wright, and Franklin P. Bull, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued defendants individually and as copartners, doing business under the name of the "Russell & Mt. Eden Salt Company," for damages for breach of contract for failure to deliver salt in accordance with the demand of plaintiff, under the terms of a written contract between the two parties. Trial was had before a jury. The preliminary proofs were made and the contract offered in evidence. The court refused its admission upon the ground of its incompleteness and uncertainty, treating the writing as an executed contract of sale. Plaintiff contended that the contract should be construed as an executory contract of sale, or as an option of purchase, which option had become effectively binding upon defendants by subsequent orders for the delivery of salt made upon defendants within the time prescribed in the contract. It sought and obtained leave to amend its complaint by showing the specific orders for salt which it had made upon defendants pursuant to its agreement, and the court permitted these amendments to be made. In so doing, however, the court declared that no change in pleading could affect its construction of the contract, which it regarded as void for uncertainty. Upon this, the case was submitted without a second offer of the contract, and the jury, under instructions from the court so to find, gave its verdict for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Certain preliminary and minor objections are presented by respondents, viz., that the principal question, that of the construction of the contract, cannot here be considered, for the reason that after the amendment to the complaint the contract should have been offered in evidence again, and that this was not done, and that upon the condition of the pleadings at the time when the contract was offered the court's ruling was correct. A second offer of the contract would have been vain and superfluous under the declaration of the trial judge, that no amendment to the pleadings could affect his construction of the contract. The law does not require the doing of vain things, and a second offer, under the circumstances disclosed in the record, was not necessary.

Of the objection that the contract when offered was not proved to have been signed by the president of plaintiff corporation, it is sufficient to say that the execution of the contract was sufficiently proved against the defendants, who were the parties sought to be charged. No issue was raised as to the authority of the president to sign, though his authority is alleged in the complaint, and the demand upon the part of plaintiff corporation for a fulfillment of what they conceived to be the terms of the contract was a sufficient ratification to have made proof of the original signing by plaintiff unnecessary. Upon the question of a variance between the allegations and proofs touching the partnership, if it be conceded that such variances exist, a question which it is not necessary to decide, and which is therefore not decided, this would not have justified the summary withdrawal of the case from the consideration of the jury by the instruction to find for the defendants which was given them by the court. It would have been for the jury, after all, to say whether plaintiff should have failed because of the asserted variance. Moreover, the case was taken from the jury, as has been said, by the refusal of the court to admit in evidence the contract, which was vital to appellant's case, and by its subsequent instruction to the jury to find for the defendants. The paramount question in the case, therefore, is the construction of the paper writing between the parties. Plaintiff's business was that of a merchant selling salt and other merchandise. Defendants were manufacturers and sellers of salt. Upon June 23, 1900, the parties entered into the following agreement:

"San Francisco, Cal., June 23rd, 1900.

"By A. L. Lundy, Manager.

"Accepted:
"Mebius & Drescher Co.,
"By P. C. Drescher, President."

Upon the 18th day of December, 1900, plaintiff demanded of the defendants the delivery of 111 tons of table salt under this agreement, offering to pay therefor the rate specified in the above contract. On the 15th day of May, 1901, plaintiff made further demand upon defendants for 639 tons of table salt, then and there offering to pay at the rate specified in the above contract. Defendants refused to comply with these demands, or to fill any part of the order. Plaintiff then served notice that upon such refusal they would be compelled to purchase the salt in open market, and would hold defendants responsible for the difference between the contract price and that which they were compelled to pay. These facts present the gist of the present action. As has been said, the trial court insisted upon treating the agreement as an executed contract of sale, void for uncertainty and lack of mutuality, and refused to regard it from any other view point, or to consider it at all in connection with the subsequent demand made by plaintiff, within the time limited in the memorandum, for a delivery of certain specified quantities of salt, bought at the price and in the manner and under the terms set forth in the agreement. In this we think the court was misled into taking too narrow a view of the question, and, in particular, in considering itself bound to treat the contract as an executed contract of sale by reason of the statement contained therein, "Mebius & Drescher Company bought of the Russell and Mount Eden Salt Company 750 tons of salt." While it is true that parol evidence may not be permitted to vary the terms of a written contract, it is equally true that in construing a contract all parts of it are to be considered, and the circumstances surrounding its making to be regarded, with a view of arriving at the true intent of the parties. Nor, again, is it the name which parties may give to their contract which determines its character. That is to be determined from a critical inspection and analysis of the whole instrument. So, reading this instrument, it becomes apparent that it does not evidence a completed sale, in which case it would be open to the objections of uncertainty and lack of mutuality which the court put upon it, but that, at the most, it was an executory contract of sale, and, at the least, an option of purchase, good until withdrawal, and binding if the option were exercised before withdrawal. Treated as an executory contract of sale, plaintiff had bound itself to take 750 tons of salt. It had until January 1, 1902, in which to select the kinds of salt which it would use, the prices thereof being fixed, and defendants, upon the other hand, had bound themselves to supply this salt at those prices as delivery of the same should be demanded during the time fixed. Certainly this is a perfectly reasonable contract for a salt merchant to enter into with a salt manufacturer. If Mebius & Drescher failed to take 750 tons of salt of specified kinds by January 1, 1902, it would have been the right of the Russell & Mt. Eden Salt Company, since there had been a failure to exercise the choice which was vested, to have insisted upon their taking such kind and quality of salt as would have been most advantageous to them. And Mebius & Drescher, under such circumstances, could not have been heard to complain if they were hurt by their own remissness in exercising the right of choice which had been given to them. Upon the other hand, the Russell & Mt. Eden Salt Company clearly bound themselves to furnish 750 tons of salt under orders of not less than 100-ton lots, at prices fixed by their agreement, of any or of all the kinds set forth in the memorandum. It was therefore competent and proper for Mebius & Drescher to have ordered salt of several different kinds, or, depending upon the condition of the market and their opportunity to make advantageous sales, to have ordered all of the salt of one kind, as they did. Nor of this could the defendants be heard to complain, since, if they had not been willing to furnish all the salt of one or another quality, it was a perfectly simple matter for them to have had the contract so declare, and to have provided a maximum amount of each quality which could be ordered. So much for the contract as an executory contract of sale. And Mebius & Drescher, having exercised their right of selection within the time limited by contract, it became the clear duty of the defendants to ship to it the 750 tons of table salt ordered in accordance with the terms of the contract.

But, treating the contract as a mere option, the legal effect is no different. As an option of purchase, it held good until withdrawn, and became binding upon acceptance. The acceptance was evidenced by the demand for the shipment of salt and the offer to pay, all in accordance with the terms of the contract, and it is not pretended that there was any withdrawal before this acceptance. There are thus, at least, two permissible constructions of this contract, which may be said fairly to express the meaning of the parties, and which make it, in the eye of the law, a valid and binding instrument. If it even be conceded that the third construction, that of an executed contract of sale, which the trial court adopted, is equally permissible, then must be invoked the familiar rule of construction that as between two permissible constructions, that which establishes a valid contract shall be preferred to that which does not, since it is reasonable to suppose that the parties meant something by their agreement, and were not engaged in an attempt to do a vain and meaningless thing. The uncertainty as to the quality and quantity of salt which might be ordered under the contract is not the uncertainty which renders such contracts invalid. The maximum amount was fixed by the order. There was no uncertainty in that sense as to quantity. It is uncertainty of this latter kind, where it cannot be determined whether it was a pound or a thousand tons, a peck or a million bushels, that have justly been held to render contracts unenforceable in law. But here the maximum amount which the seller could be called upon to deliver, and the purchaser be called upon to take, was absolutely fixed, and it may not be said that, because a certain play of discretion as to quality was allowed within that limit, this discretion introduced an element of uncertainty which would invalidate the contract. Reduced to simpler terms, if a man should say to a seller, "I will take from you three dozen pocketknives of one or all of three described kinds," the price for each kind being specified, "but I want you to agree to give me a week in which to determine which of the kinds I will select," it would come with some astonishment to a merchant to be told that such an agreement was void in law for uncertainty. It is probably safe to say that a million of such transactions take place every month throughout the country without question or the possibility of question as to the legality of the agreement. The agreement is at once relieved of uncertainty when the choice is exercised, and such contracts come directly within the letter as well as the spirit of the maxim embodied in our Civil Code (section 3538). "That is certain which can be made certain."

In summing up upon this matter, therefore, we hold this contract to be an executory contract of sale, containing no elements of uncertainty which would render it invalid and imposing a mutuality of engagement upon the parties to it. It does not fall within the sweep of the condemnation of contracts such as that in Cold Blast Co. v. Kansas City, etc., Co., 114 Fed. 77, 52 C. C. A. 25, 57 L. R. A. 696, where there was no specification as to the quantity to be delivered, and which was a mere offer to deliver certain materials at prices stated. The court held there that there was no mutuality, and that there was a vital uncertainty in terms, in that it could not be determined what was the quantity contemplated to be delivered. In Crane v. Crane Co., 105 Fed. 869, 45 C. C. A. 96, the principles to be invoked in construing contracts such as this, are well set forth, but the vice in the contract there reviewed was the vice of lack of mutuality; there being no agreement to purchase. In American Oil Co. v. Kirk, 68 Fed. 791, 15 C. C. A. 540, the court expresses the conclusive objection to the contract in the following language: "The time of ordering as well as the quantity was left wholly to the wish of one party, who might drag it over a hundred years." And so, without prolonging the discussion, the same distinction will be found to obtain in all cases upon which respondents rely. Upon the other hand, and as showing that contracts of the nature of the one here in suit, are enforceable in law, and that damages for their breach may be recovered, reference may be made to Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Witham, L. R. 9 C. P. 16; Topliff v. Topliff, 122 U. S. 121, 7 Sup. Ct. 1057, 30 L. Ed. 1110; Cherry v Smith, 39 Am. Dec. 150; Robson v. Miss. Riv. Logging Co. (C. C.) 43 Fed. 371; Wells v. Alexandre, 130 N. Y. 642, 29 N. E. 142, 15 L. R. A. 218; Nat. Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 110 Ill. 427.

(S. F. No. 3,666.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1907.)

1. MORTGAGES—RIGHT TO FORECLOSE.

To secure a balance due a trust company, a land company executed a trust deed covering certain land, whereby it agreed to use reasonable diligence to sell the land, and from the proceeds pay the balance due. Held, in a suit to foreclose the trust deed, that an agreement in the deed on the part of the trust company to look for its payment only to the proceeds of such sales does not bar its right to seek or enforce payment in any other way after the land company has failed to make the sales within a reasonable time, and has violated its agreement to use reasonable diligence in making sales.

2. SAME—MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY.

A trust deed which gave the grantor a right to sell land at prices not less than those designated in a schedule in the deed, and providing that he use reasonable diligence to make sales, could not be construed to give him an arbitrary power to fix prices which would make any sales impossible, and would for an indefinite time prevent the accomplishment of the purposes of the trust.

3. SAME—PRIORITIES—ASSIGNMENT.

Where two parties base their claims on the same trust deed, but one has, as assignee of an agreement and the holder of a note, rights superior to another, his rights are in no wise affected by the fact that the note passed through the hands of the other party, since the other party was not required by the transaction to surrender any part of the security for the claim assigned to it.

4. SAME—EQUITABLE MORTGAGES.

A written agreement entered into by parties to make certain property a security for past indebtedness and for future advances, and upon the faith of which both parties have acted in making and accepting payments and advances, constitutes an equitable mortgage or lien upon the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, §§ 44, 57, 58.]

5. SAME—FORECLOSURE—DECREE FOR SALE.

On the foreclosure of a trust deed on certain land, which provided that defendant could sell the land at prices not less than those designated in a schedule in the deed, it was not necessary for the court, in decreeing sales of the land, to direct that the sales be made at figures not less than the minimum prices set forth in the trust deed, since the provision for minimum sales fell with provisions authorizing the defendant to make the sales, and the court could direct a sale in any just and equitable manner.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

SLOSS, J. On January 5, 1891, Leland Stanford conveyed to James P. McCarthy a tract of land containing 589.03 acres, situate in the outskirts of the city of San Francisco. In consideration of the transfer, McCarthy gave Stanford four promissory notes, two for $50,000 each and two for $112,500 each, and secured the payment of the notes by a mortgage of the land conveyed.

On the 1st day of April, 1891, McCarthy conveyed to the Sunnyside Land Company about 200 acres of said tract; the portion so conveyed being known as "The Sunnyside." The consideration for this conveyance was the agreement of the Sunnyside Land Company to pay $400,000, $100,000 of which was paid in cash and $300,000 was secured by a mortgage upon the 200 acres so conveyed. The Sunnyside Land Company thereupon had "The Sunnyside" surveyed and divided into blocks and lots, which were delineated upon a map of "The Sunnyside," filed in the recorder's office. On July 6, 1891, McCarthy conveyed to William M. Fitzhugh the undivided one-half of the indebtedness due him by the Sunnyside Land Company and of the mortgage given to secure the same. On the 5th day of February, 1892, there was executed by the Sunnyside Land Company, as party of the first part, James P. McCarthy and William M. Fitzhugh, as parties of the second part, and the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, as party of the third part, an instrument in writing, which is referred to in the record as "Trust No. 1." Briefly stated, this agreement, certain provisions of which will be set forth more in detail hereafter, provided that the mortgage of $300,000 given by the Sunnyside Land Company to McCarthy was canceled, and all the lands embraced therein, excepting those which had been sold by the Sunnyside Land Company, were bargained, sold, and conveyed by the land company and by McCarthy and Fitzhugh to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company upon these trusts: That the Sunnyside Land Company should proceed with due diligence to make sales of said tract of land at such prices and upon such terms as it should deem advisable, but in no case under certain minimum prices which were set forth in the instrument, and when purchasers should be found the said title insurance and trust company and the said Sunnyside Land Company should make a deed of the property sold, and the proceeds of the sales, less 7½ per cent. thereof, which should be retained by the land company to cover the expenses of advertising and selling, should be received by the title insurance and trust company, and applied by it in payment of the Stanford mortgage, and then in payment of the balance due McCarthy and Fitzhugh on the canceled mortgage. After the payment of the foregoing amounts, together with certain expenses incidental to the discharge of the trust, reconveyance should be made to the Sunnyside Land Company of all the lands not sold. It was provided by this instrument, as it had been provided by the mortgage from the Sunnyside Land Company to McCarthy, that the land company should not be required to make payment of any part of the moneys so owing by it from any source other than from sales of the said tract of land. The title insurance and trust company was authorized to make advances to pay claims affecting the property covered by the instrument, and was given a first lien security upon "The Sunnyside" for the repayment of all such advances, with interest. The title insurance and trust company, however, did not obligate itself to make such advances. The land company was given the option of making payments at any time from other sources than from sales.

On January 3, 1893, there was due and payable to Stanford $81,523.24 on account of one of the notes given by McCarthy. Stanford demanded payment of the amount due, and neither McCarthy nor Fitzhugh nor the Sunnyside Land Company was able to make payment. Under these circumstances the title insurance and trust company, and certain other persons interested, agreed to advance $31,523.24, and the title insurance and trust company, at the request of the Sunnyside Land Company, McCarthy, and Fitzhugh, induced Wells, Fargo & Co. to advance $50,000, making the $81,523.24 required to discharge the Stanford indebtedness. At the time of the advance of the $50,000 by Wells, Fargo & Co. an agreement was entered into by the Sunnyside Land Company, as party of the first part, Wells, Fargo & Co., as party of the second part, California Title Insurance & Trust Company, as party of the third part, McCarthy and Fitzhugh, as parties of the fourth part, and the Stanford Addition Land Company (successor in interest of McCarthy and Fitzhugh in part of the lands purchased by McCarthy), as party of the fifth part. This instrument provided that, in consideration of the advance by Wells, Fargo & Co., the Sunnyside Land Company agreed to pay Wells, Fargo & Co. or order the sum of $50,000 within three months, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and further agreed that the said $50,000 should be used to discharge the lien of the Stanford mortgage as to "The Sunnyside," and that Wells, Fargo & Co. should be subrogated to the rights of Stanford under the said mortgage, and should have the first lien upon said real property, and upon all property and proceeds of the securities and evidences of debt received by the California Title Insurance & Trust Company under trust No. 1. The Sunnyside Land Company executed its promissory note to Wells, Fargo & Co. for $50,000, in accordance with this agreement. Wells, Fargo & Co. paid Stanford the said $50,000, and Stanford released the lien of his mortgage upon "The Sunnyside."

Thereafter sales were made of lands belonging to the Sunnyside Land Company in accordance with the provisions of trust No. 1, and from the proceeds of these sales payments were made to Wells, Fargo & Co. until, on March 29, 1897, the balance due was reduced from $50,000 to $15,900. At that time Wells, Fargo & Co. was insisting upon payment and threatening a foreclosure under its agreement of January 3, 1893, and in order to prevent such foreclosure suit, at the request of the Sunnyside Land Company, the California Title Insurance & Trust Company paid Wells, Fargo & Co. said $15,900, and took from Wells, Fargo & Co. an assignment of the indebtedness due under the agreement of January 3, 1893. This indebtedness was then evidenced by a new note of the Sunnyside Land Company to Wells, Fargo & Co. On October 12, 1899, the California Title Insurance & Trust Company executed an instrument transferring and assigning to the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, said claim (and note) for $15,900, together with the security agreement of January 3, 1893, and on the 8th of November, 1899, the Anglo-Californian Bank transferred this claim, note, and agreement to John B. Earle, the plaintiff in this action.

The plaintiff instituted this action on November 13, 1899, alleging substantially the foregoing facts, and sought to recover the sum of $15,900, with interest, and to foreclose his lien on so much of "The Sunnyside" as had not been sold to bona fide purchasers. The complaint named as defendants the Sunnyside Land Company, California Title Insurance & Trust Company, and a number of other persons who are alleged to claim some interest in the land. All of these other parties derive whatever interest they may have from McCarthy and Fitzhugh

The California Title Insurance & Trust Company appeared and filed a cross-complaint, in which, in addition to showing the transactions hereinabove stated, it set out in full the instrument described as "Trust No. 1." It may be well at this point to state more fully some of the provisions of that instrument. Paragraph 5 reads as follows: "It is further provided that the said party of the first part (Sunnyside Land Company) shall be entitled to make payments in any amount to said party of the third part (California Title Insurance & Trust Company) on account of the indebtedness hereby secured to be paid and to have said payments applied toward the release of such hereinabove described lands, as said party of the first part may designate, from the lien of said mortgage to Leland Stanford; but it is understood that the sum hereby secured to be paid shall be and is to be paid (except under the said option) only from the proceeds of the sales made by the said party of the first part of the lands hereinabove described, and that said parties of the second and third parts will not require the payment thereof from any other source. The said party of the first part, however, agrees to use reasonable diligence in placing said lands upon the market and in making sales thereof in subdivisions of lots or blocks as said lots and blocks are delineated and designated upon a certain map entitled 'Sunnyside,' owned by the Sunnyside Land Company, and filed in the office of the recorder of said city and county, on the 6th day of April, 1891, such sales to be by it made at such prices and upon such terms as it may deem beneficial and profitable, but at prices not less per block than those designated in the hereinafter mentioned 'Schedule B.' * * *" Paragraph 10 reads: "In case the said party of the third part shall at any time advance, or cause to be advanced by any person or persons or corporation sums of money for the purpose of making payments upon the said mortgage to Leland Stanford, or to any other person or persons or corporation to whom the said party of the third part is hereby directed or permitted to make payments of money, such payments out of the money so advanced shall, except where herein otherwise provided, be deemed to have been made for the benefit of the said parties of the second part (McCarthy and Fitzhugh) and the said party of the third part shall as between the said parties of the second and third part, immediately become subrogated pro tanto to all the rights and privileges of the said party of the second part under this deed and assignment of trust; and this deed and assignment of trust shall be and constitute, as between the said parties of the second and third part, a first lien security in favor of said party of the third part for the repayment of all such advances, together with interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum." In addition it may be noted that paragraph 2 of the instrument provides that "this deed and assignment of trust is made to secure the payment, as herein provided, to the said parties of the second part of the sum of $226,742.76, together with accrued interest. * * *"

The cross-complaint of the California Title Insurance & Trust Company alleges that at the time of filing the cross-complaint there remained unpaid and due from the Sunnyside Land Company to the cross-complainant, as trustee on account of the principal sum secured to be paid by said trust No. 1, the sum of $111,198.63, together with the sum of $36,552.17 for interest. It alleges further that the said Sunnyside Land Company "has at all times failed and neglected to use reasonable or any diligence in placing the lands herein designated as 'The Sunnyside' upon the market, and making sales thereof in subdivisions of lots or blocks, as said lots and blocks are delineated and designated upon such map of Sunnyside or any other subdivisions or at all." The cross-complaint asks for a decree that the property be sold to pay the amounts due the cross-complainant under the trust deed.

The answers of the Sunnyside Land Company to the complaint and the cross-complaint raise no material issue that need here be considered beyond the denial of the allegation of the cross-complaint that the land company had failed and neglected to use reasonable or any diligence in making sales of the lands.

After a trial the court made its findings of fact, in which it found, among other things, that "said Sunnyside Land Company has at all times since the execution of said trust No. 1 failed and neglected to use reasonable or any diligence in placing the lands herein designated as 'The Sunnyside' upon the market and in making sales thereof in subdivisions of lots or blocks, as said lots and blocks are delineated and designated upon the said map of 'Sunnyside,' or any other subdivisions, or at all," and that "the prices which said Sunnyside Land Company placed and maintained on the unsold and unconveyed lots in said Sunnyside tract, and which it sought and tried to obtain for the same after the execution of said trust No. 1, were and are excessive and prohibitory, and were and are largely in excess of the prices that were obtainable in the open market and largely in excess of the minimum selling price set forth in Schedule B annexed to said trust No. 1."

Upon the findings the court made its decree, in which it decreed that there was due the plaintiff from the Sunnyside Land Company upon the promissory note of March 26, 1897, for principal, interest, and attorney's fees the sum of $21,608.64, which, with plaintiff's costs, constituted a first lien upon the lands described in the complaint; that there was due the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee, from the Sunnyside Land Company for principal and interest secured to be paid by the instrument known as "Trust No. 1," the sum of $165,627.71, which constituted a valid lien upon said lands and premises, and that said lands, or so much thereof as might be sufficient to raise the sums declared to be due the plaintiff and cross-complainant, together with interest thereon and costs subsequently accruing, be sold at public auction in the manner prescribed by law on foreclosure of mortgages by a commissioner appointed by the court, and that the commissioner, after the expiration of the time for redemption, execute a deed or deeds to the purchaser or purchasers at said sale, and that the commissioner out of the proceeds of said sale, after retaining his commissions and disbursements, pay, first, to the cross-complainant, California Title Insurance & Trust Company, the amount sufficient to redeem the said lands from all tax sales to the state; second, that said commissioner out of said proceeds pay to the plaintiff the sums declared to be due to said plaintiff; and, third, that said commissioner pay to the cross-complainant, California Title Insurance & Trust Company, the balance of the sums declared to be due to it as trustee from said Sunnyside Land Company under said trust No. 1. Any surplus remaining is directed to be paid to the defendant, the Sunnyside Land Company. The decree then goes on to designate the amounts due to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company individually, and payable out of the amount to be received by it, and decrees that the defendants other than the Sunnyside Land Company and the California Title Insurance & Trust Company have no interest in the lands, except such right as they may have in moneys received by the California Title Insurance & Trust Company as trustee for them.

The Sunnyside Land Company made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and now appeals from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

While the transactions which gave rise to this controversy are somewhat involved and complicated, the questions to be considered upon these appeals are neither numerous nor difficult. The principal contention of the Sunnyside Land Company is based upon the provision found in trust No. 1, to the effect that the sum secured to be paid is to be paid only from the proceeds of sales made by said land company of the lands covered by the trust deed, and that the other parties to the instrument will not require the payment thereof from any other source. From this provision it is argued that the respondents —i. e., the plaintiff and the California Title Insurance & Trust Company—agreed to look for their payment only to the proceeds of such sales to be made by the Sunnyside Land Company, and that they have no right to seek or enforce payment in any other way. But we think that this argument is based upon too narrow a construction of the provisions of paragraph 5 of the trust deed. That paragraph provides, in addition to the agreement that the payment of the sums due is not to be required from any other source than sales of lands, the undertaking that the Sunnyside Land Company is to use reasonable diligence in placing said lands upon the market and in making sales thereof, such sales to be by it made at such prices and upon such terms as it may deem beneficial and profitable, but at prices not less per block than those designated in a schedule attached to the deed. These provisions are all to be read together, and it certainly could not have been the intention of the parties that the Sunnyside Land Company should, by violating its agreement to use reasonable diligence in making sales, have the power to indefinitely or perpetually postpone the right of the creditors to obtain payment of their claims out of the land which was by the deed of trust made security, and the only security, for such claims. The cross-complainant alleged, and the court found, that the Sunnyside Land Company had failed to use reasonable diligence in making sales of these lands. This finding is attacked by the appellant as unsustained by the evidence. We do not intend to restate or even to summarize the many pages of testimony appearing in the transcript upon both sides of this question, but shall content ourselves with saying that, in our judgment, the evidence was ample to support the finding. This being so, can it be said that paragraph 5 of the deed of trust contemplated that the party of the first part, which had agreed to use reasonable diligence in selling these lands, could violate this clause of the agreement, and still stand upon the connected clause, providing that no payments were to be made except out of its sales? The case presents a close analogy in principle to the decisions holding that, where there is an agreement to pay a sum of money out of the proceeds of a particular fund to be realized by some act of the party who is to make the payment, the act must be performed by him within a reasonable time, and, if he fails to perform this duty, the sum is payable without reference to the performance of the condition. In Sears v. Wright, 24 Me. 278, the action was brought upon the defendant's agreement to pay a certain sum of money from "the avails of the logs bought of Martin Mower, when there is a sale made." It was contended that as the logs had not been sold there was no obligation, but the court, finding that a reasonable time for a sale had elapsed, refused to recognize the defense, saying: "By the terms of that contract it could not be inferred that the plaintiff had consented to subject himself to any such contingency. His agreement in terms was to wait till the logs could be sold. Thus the defendants had a duty to perform. They were bound to sell the logs and do it within a reasonable time. A reasonable time for such purpose had long since elapsed." In Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. 560, 22 L. Ed. 161, the action was upon obligations promising to pay "as soon as the crop can be sold or the money raised from any other source." The suit was instituted more than five years after the date of the instrument. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover without proof that the crops had been sold or the money raised from any other source; the court saying: "No time having been specified within which the crops should be sold or the money raised otherwise, the law annexed as an incident that one or the other should be done within a reasonable time, and that the sum admitted to be due should be paid accordingly. Payment was not conditional to the extent of depending wholly and finally upon the alternatives mentioned. The stipulation secured to the defendants a reasonable amount of time within which to procure in one mode or the other the means necessary to meet the liability. Upon the occurrence of either of the events named or the lapse of such time the debt became due. It could not have been the intention of the parties that if the crop were destroyed, or from any other cause could never be sold, and the defendants could not procure the money from any other source the debt should never be paid. Such a result would be a mockery of justice. * * * When the suit was instituted, more than five years had elapsed from the date of the instrument. This was much more than a reasonable time for the fulfillment of the undertaking of the defendants, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover." In Williston v. Perkins, 51 Cal. 554, the defendants, who were engaged in building a vessel, gave to their laborers certificates providing that the payees were entitled to receive specified sums, "when the three-masted schooner now in course of construction by said association is sold." Action was brought upon these certificates before the vessel had been sold. The trial court found that the defendants did not make an honest effort to sell the vessel at its market value, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. The judgment was affirmed on appeal, the court saying: "The defendants were entitled to only reasonable time in which to finish and sell the schooner, and, that time having elapsed, the plaintiff could maintain his action." See, also, Bryant v. Saling, 4 Mo. 522; Ubsdell v. Cunningham, 22 Mo. 124; Hicks v. Shouse, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 483; Wilder v. Sprague, 50 Me. 354; De Wolfe v. French, 51 Me. 420; Crocker v. Holmes, 65 Me. 195, 20 Am. Rep. 687; Noland v. Bull, 24 Or. 485, 33 Pac. 983. In nearly all of these cases the literal reading of the contract was merely that the payment should be made upon the sale of certain property or the performance of some act by the defendant. The court, however, in each instance had no difficulty in reading into the contract an obligation on the part of the defendant to use reasonable diligence to perform the act, upon the completion of which the payment was made contingent, and in the event of his failure so to do in requiring payment without the performance of the condition. The present case is stronger than any of those cited, in that here the Sunnyside Land Company agrees in terms to use reasonable diligence in placing said lands upon the market and in making sales thereof.

It is true that this case differs from those cited in that here, under the express provisions of trust No. 1, a personal liability could not be imposed upon the Sunnyside Land Company. Nor was it attempted to impose such liability. But by the instrument in question the "deed and assignment of trust" was made a "first lien security" in favor of the title insurance and trust company for the repayment of all advances, and was also made to secure the payment to McCarthy and Fitzhugh, through the title company, of the purchase price not yet received by them. The payment of these sums being thus secured by the land, we are satisfied that, upon the failure of the land company to use the required diligence to make sales, a court of equity was authorized to subject the security to the payment of the claims of the plaintiffs and the cross-complainant by some appropriate method, such as the method here adopted.

The appellant lays much stress upon the provision in paragraph 5 of the deed of trust that sales are to be made by it at such prices and upon such terms as it may deem beneficial and profitable, but at prices not less per block than those designated in the schedule. The provision for minimum prices is no doubt inserted for the protection of the parties other than the Sunnyside Land Company. It is a restriction upon the right of the land company to fix prices according to its pleasure. But it is not the only restriction on this right. The clause giving the right to fix prices must be read in connection with the covenant to use reasonable diligence to make sales, and in the light of the general purpose of the trust agreement. The object which the parties had in view was that the lands should be disposed of to the ends, first, that the claims against the lands should be discharged; and second, that the land company should realize a profit either in money or in lands remaining unsold after payment of the indebtedness. It was never intended that the Sunnyside Land Company should have an arbitrary and unfettered power to fix prices which would make any sales impossible and would for an indefinite time prevent the accomplishment of the purposes of the trust.

In this discussion we have treated the plaintiff's case and that of the California Title Insurance & Trust Company as standing on the same grounds, viz., that both are based on claims secured by the terms of trust No. 1. But, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, the relief granted by the decree finds other support. The plaintiff is the assignee of the agreement of January 3, 1893, under which Wells, Fargo & Co. made an advance of $50,000. In this agreement the Sunnyside Land Company stipulated that Wells, Fargo & Co. should be subrogated to the rights of Stanford under the original mortgage. The plaintiff, as the holder of a part of the indebtedness, and assignee of the agreement, succeeded to this right of subrogation, and is, by virtue of it, entitled to a decree of foreclosure. His rights are in no wise affected by the fact that the Wells, Fargo & Co. note passed through the hands of the California Title Insurance & Trust Company. There was nothing in the relations of trust created by trust No. 1, which prevented the title company from advancing the money required to pay off Wells, Fargo & Co., and taking the security which had been held by Wells, Fargo & Co. The advance was made to prevent a threatened foreclosure, and in making it the title company was not required to surrender any part of the security for the claim assigned to it.

It is argued by the appellant that the instrument known as "Trust No. 1" attempts to create a trust for purposes not authorized by section 857 of the Civil Code, and that for that reason the entire instrument is void. We do not think it necessary in this case to determine whether the instrument in question was a valid trust deed so as to convey the legal title to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company. If it was not a valid trust deed, there can be no difficulty in sustaining the instrument as an equitable mortgage or lien. As this court has said, in Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 467, 58 Pac. 907, 77 Am. St. Rep. 192, quoting the rule as stated in Howard v. Iron Company, 62 Minn. 298, 64 N. W. 896: "Every express agreement in writing whereby the party clearly indicates an intention to make some particular property therein described a security for a debt, creates an equitable lien upon the property, which is enforceable. The form of the writing is not important, provided it sufficiently appears that it was thereby intended to create a security. If that intention appears, it will create a mortgage in equity or a specific lien upon the property so intended to be mortgaged." In a case like this, where the parties have entered into a written agreement, of whatever form, intended to make certain property a security for past indebtedness and for future advances, and have acted upon the faith of that agreement in making and accepting such further advances, we should be slow to adopt any construction which would result in invalidating the entire transaction and depriving the creditor who has advanced his money in good faith, of any remedy for its recovery. No policy of the law is violated by treating this instrument as creating a lien in the nature of a mortgage, if it cannot be upheld as a deed of trust. Whether it be the one or the other, we do not doubt the power of a court of equity to direct the sale of the security for the discharge of the debt, at least where the instrument itself furnishes no available method of realizing on the security.

We cannot agree with the contention of the appellant that the judgment should have directed that the sales be made at figures not less than the minimum prices set forth in the trust agreement. This provision for minimum sales was, as we have said, inserted for the benefit of the creditors. Furthermore, it was a part and parcel of the general scheme for the sale of the lands by the Sunnyside Land Company itself. When, by reason of its neglect to perform its duty, the Sunnyside Land Company produced a condition which authorized a court of equity to take the security into its hands for the purpose of realizing the sums for which it was liable, the provision for minimum prices fell with the provision authorizing the land company to make the sales, and the court was authorized to direct a sale in any just and equitable manner. We see no objection to the manner that is here adopted.

The point is made that the judgment does not follow the findings in that it authorizes payment to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company of amounts due to it individually, in addition to the sum of $165,627.71, payable to it as trustee. Reading the decree as an entirety, there can be no question that it intended to provide and did provide that the sums due to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company individually should be deducted from the total sum of $165,627.71 to be received by it from the proceeds of the sales.

We find no prejudicial error in any rulings made by the court upon the admission or rejection of evidence, nor is any other point made by the appellants that requires notice.

KING v. DUGAN et al. (S. F. 3,942.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1907.)

1. Appeal — Presentation of Grounds of Review—Motion for New Trial—Service of Statement—Failure to Serve in Time — Relief from Court — Sufficiency of Showing.

A statement on motion for a new trial which showed that objections thereto for failure to serve in time were heard in open court and submitted on plaintiff's affidavits of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing relief in such case, defendants' counter affidavits and plaintiff's affidavit in rebuttal and that they were, "after consideration, overruled, and said statement ordered settled and filed," sufficiently showed that plaintiff was relieved by the trial court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, from the effect of her failure to serve the statement in time so as to authorize consideration of such statement on appeal.

2. Dedication—Estoppel to Deny—By Record of Plat.

Where the owner of land caused a portion thereof to be surveyed and subdivided into blocks, lots, and streets, a map showing the subdivisions and streets to be filed in the office of the county recorder, and subsequently sold and conveyed lots by reference to such map, a person thereafter acquiring from the owner title including the fee in the streets designated in the survey held it under the same conditions as her predecessor and subject to the same burden; and hence she was bound by his declaration of record that the land constituted portions of public streets, and was not entitled to possession thereof against purchasers from him.

3. Ejectment — Equitable Defenses — Persons Against Whom Available.

Where plaintiff in a suit to quiet title to certain lands against the holder of the legal title, after having obtained the relief sought, brought an action of ejectment, with notice of equities existing in favor of defendants in such action, she stood in the position of the former holder of the legal title with full notice of the equities of defendants; and hence, where, by reason of a mistake in a deed from the former holder of the legal title to defendants' predecessor, defendants had a perfect equitable right as against the former holder, such equitable right was a full and complete defense in the action of ejectment.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action in ejectment. Judgment went for defendants, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

Defendants make a preliminary objection to any consideration by this court of the statement on motion for a new trial, on the ground that no statement was prepared or served within the time prescribed by law, or as extended by stipulation of counsel or any valid order of court. Admittedly the proposed statement was not served in time. Objection to the settlement of the statement was duly made and overruled. In the absence of action on the part of the trial court made upon a proper showing under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, relieving plaintiff from the effect of her failure, the statement could not be considered here. See Cameron v. Railroad Co., 129 Cal. 279, 282, 61 Pac. 955; Wheeler v. Karnes, 125 Cal. 51, 57 Pac. 893. It is claimed that there was no such action on the part of the trial court. We think that the statement sufficiently shows such action. It is true that what purport to be, first, a notice of motion for such relief and the settlement of the statement, and second, a minute order granting said motion, printed in the transcript, constitute no proper part of the record on appeal, not being included in any bill of exceptions or statement, and cannot be here considered. See Code Civ. Proc. §§ 661, 952. But it does appear from the statement that, in response to the objections, the only showing made by plaintiff was one by affidavits of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. This was met by counter affidavits on the part of defendants, and by an affidavit in rebuttal on the part of plaintiff. The objections were heard in open court, and submitted to the court on these affidavits, and it is stated that they were "after consideration, overruled, and said statement ordered settled and filed." It would doubtless have been better and safer practice to incorporate in the statement a showing in terms that application for relief was made to the court, and also that the court granted the same, but we are inclined to the opinion that this should be held to be the effect of what is said therein. A sufficient showing of excuse was made to preclude us from saying the court abused its discretion in relieving plaintiff from the effect of her default.

The land involved in the action is a small strip 37 feet wide and about 325 feet long. It is the most easterly portion of lot 5, subdivisions of the Mezes Ranch, Belmont, in San Mateo county, adjoining lot 6 of the same tract. One Harriet M. Lewis was originally the owner of both lots 5 and 6, containing 9 acres of land. On February 2, 1893, said Lewis agreed to sell to one W. O. Brown all of said property, subject to a mortgage that covered the same, which Brown subsequently satisfied, and on that day executed her deed to Brown, intending to convey to him thereby and he intending to acquire thereby all of said 9 acres. The description in this deed was by metes and bounds and acreage. The acreage was correctly stated, but, by mistake and inadvertence, the metes and bounds expressed only included lot 6. Said Lewis forthwith delivered possession of all of said 9 acres to Brown. He caused a portion thereof to be surveyed and subdivided into blocks, lots, and streets, and on March 30, 1894, filed in the office of the county recorder of San Mateo county a map showing these subdivisions and streets. The strip of land in suit was the westerly end of block 2 according to said map, being the westerly 37 feet of lots 11 to 19 thereof, both inclusive, prolonged across two streets shown on said map, Cypress avenue and Hill street. West of said strip and adjoining the same, another street, Laurel avenue, was shown on said map, the lots named above fronting thereon. Immediately thereafter he caused the lots shown on the map to be staked out, and the streets to be opened, graded and turnpiked, and ever since then they have been open, and used by the public as desired. He sold and conveyed lots by reference to said map. On April 5, 1894, he mortgaged a portion of the property to the Occidental Building & Loan Association, describing the property mortgaged by reference to said map, including lots 11 to 16, both inclusive, in block 2, as laid out on said map. On January 24, 1900, in foreclosure proceedings brought thereon, a decree of foreclosure sale was given, and at the sale thereunder defendant Charles E. Dugan purchased all of the mortgaged property, and subsequently received the commissioner's deed, and he thereafter transferred the property to the defendant Lydia Dugan, since when she has been in possession thereof. The defendants took the land relying on the correctness of said map both as to lots and streets, and believing that such streets had been dedicated as a means of access to the lots, and will suffer great loss shall the streets be now closed or obstructed. Until July 26, 1901, Brown continued in possession of all of said lot 5, except that portion embraced in the lots and streets shown on the map, and the lot was assessed every year to and including the year 1901 to him.

Plaintiff's deraignment of title consists of a subsequent deed from Brown to one William F. Sawyer of lot 5 of the Mezes Ranch, a quitclaim deed for the same property dated November 7, 1901, from said Sawyer to her, and a decree quieting her title as to the same property as against Harriet M. Lewis, in an action to quiet title commenced by her on December 27, 1901. Prior to the commencement of her action to quiet title, plaintiff had actual notice of the sale by Lewis to Brown of the whole of lots 5 and 6, and of the error in the Lewis-Brown deed, of Brown's going into possession of all of said property, and of the laying out, opening, grading, and turnpiking of the streets shown on the map.

The foregoing facts are shown by findings as to which there is more than ample support in the evidence. The trial court also found, in addition to the probative facts above stated, that plaintiff is the owner of those portions of the land in controversy that are included in Hill street and Cypress avenue, as shown on said map, and of the portion thereof included in lots 17, 18, and 19 of block 2, according to the Brown map. being the portion not covered by the Brown mortgage under which defendants deraign title, but that she is not the owner or entitled to the possession of the remaining portion of said strip, viz., the portion covered by the Brown mortgage. It further found that she was not entitled to the possession of the portion embraced in said streets, and that defendants had not ousted or ejected plaintiff from any part of the land. Upon these findings, judgment was given for defendants.

It is manifest that, in so far as plaintiff claims under Brown, her only source of title other than the decree quieting her title as against Lewis, her rights are subordinate to those of defendant Lydia Dugan, who acquired by mesne conveyances under a prior deed from Brown. Said defendant acquired under this chain of deeds as against Brown the absolute ownership of that portion of the land in controversy, which is included in the lots purchased at the foreclosure sale, being portions of lots 11 to 16, both inclusive, of block 2. Regardless of any question as to whether the portions of said strip included in Cypress avenue and Hill street became public highways, there can be no question that, as to those acquiring under Brown according to and on the faith of the map filed by him, they became highways as against Brown and his successors. They acquired the same rights as to the land shown on the plat as such streets as against Brown and his successors, as they would if such streets were in fact public streets. Their rights in this respect are established under the doctrine of estoppel in pais, which is held applicable to the vendor who has declared to the purchaser that the parcels are streets, in favor of those who act thereon in making the purchase. The matter has been discussed many times by this court, but it is unnecessary to do more here than to cite the case of Prescott v. Edwards, 117 Cal. 298, 49 Pac. 178, 59 Am. St. Rep. 186. So far, therefore, as plaintiff acquired under Brown, while she acquired the fee in the streets, she held it under the same conditions as her predecessor had held it, and subject to the same burden. As to those who had purchased under him on the faith of his declaration of record that the land constituted portions of public streets, she was bound by such declaration equally with him (Code Civ. Proc. § 1849), and therefore was not entitled to the possession thereof as against such purchasers.

As to the claim of plaintiff based upon the decree quieting her title to all of the property as against Lewis: The trial court found, upon sufficient evidence, that plaintiff commenced this action with full notice of defendants' equities. The utmost possible effect of the decree was to make plaintiff the successor, with full notice of the equities of defendants, of such rights as Lewis had in the property on the day the action to quiet title was commenced, December 27, 1901. Conceding that the bare legal title to the land in controversy was then in Lewis, defendant Lydia Dugan, by reason of the probative facts found as to the mistake in the deed from Lewis to Brown, had, as successor and purchaser from Brown, a perfect equitable right as against Lewis to the land she had purchased under Brown, and to the unobstructed use as streets of the necessary streets depicted on the Brown map, including Hill street and Cypress avenue. It is well settled that such equitable rights constitute a full and complete defense as against the bare legal title in an action of ejectment. See Hoppough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430; Walker v. Brem, 67 Cal. 600, 8 Pac. 320; Meeker v. Dalton, 75 Cal. 154, 158, 16 Pac. 764. In the last case cited, the defense was asserted by the successor of the grantee in whose deed the mistake was first made (the mistake being repeated in the deed from such grantee to the defendant, Dalton), and sustained as against a subsequent grantee with notice of the original grantor. This court said: "It is apparent that when Ringer (the original grantee) purchased and went into possession of the lot in controversy, he became the equitable owner of it, and, when he sold to the defendants, the latter succeeded to all his rights. It is also apparent that, when the plaintiff received his deed to the lot, he took only such right as his grantor had, and that was the naked legal title. The defendant, then, having the equitable title, coupled with the possession, the question is, could he set up that title as a defense to an action of ejectment brought against him by the holder of the legal title?" It was held that he could. Quoting from Hoppough v. Struble, supra, and declaring that the same rule obtains in this state, the court said: "A reformation of the deed is not necessary, but the same facts which will entitle defendant thereto will establish his equitable right to possession, and constitute a defense as effectual as the legal title." We can conceive of no good reason why this defense is not as available against plaintiff, the successor of Mrs. Lewis, with full notice of defendants' equities, as it would have been against Mrs. Lewis herself.

It thus appears that the conclusion of the trial court to the effect that plaintiff was not entitled, as against defendant Lydia Dugan, to the possession of any portion of the land in controversy other than the small portion thereof included in block 2, being portions of lots 17, 18, and 19 thereof, was the necessary result of the specific probative facts found, the finding as to the right to possession of those portions included in Cypress avenue and Hill street being construed, as it must be when taken in connection with the other findings, to mean no more than that plaintiffs are not entitled as against said defendant to any such possession as would interfere with the use thereof as streets. This finding as to the right to possession is, under the circumstances shown by the record, sufficient to require the judgment that plaintiff take nothing by her action. It is unnecessary to consider the question as to whether the finding that plaintiff is not the "owner" of the portion of block 2 of which the defendant Lydia Dugan is the equitable owner, is technically correct or not. She did have the bare legal title thereto, but nothing more, and this bare legal title was ineffectual for any purpose as against the defendants' equities.

There is no other point made requiring notice.

CITY STORE v. SAN JOSE–LOS GATOS INTERURBAN RY. CO. (S. F. 3,809.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1907.)

STREET RAILROADS — RESTRAINING USE OF STREET.

The complaint of an abutter on a street to enjoin the construction and operation of a street railroad in the street, which it is alleged defendant is about to do without right, does not show that the public nuisance will be specially injurious to plaintiff, in which case only, under Civ. Code, § 3493, can he maintain the action, by the statement of the conclusion that, by reason of the construction and operation, the property right of plaintiff will be irreparably injured, in that the value of the property will be greatly diminished, free access to it irreparably impaired, and the rental value permanently decreased; this not being a statement of facts, as is necessary, from which the court can determine whether plaintiff's apprehensions are well founded.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to permanently restrain the defendant from constructing, operating, and maintaining a street railroad over Market street, a public street in the city of San Jose. A general demurrer to the complaint having been sustained, and plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for defendant, and from this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The only point presented on the appeal is as to the correctness of the ruling of the lower court upon the demurrer. The plaintiff alleged the corporate existence of plaintiff and the defendant railway company; that plaintiff is the owner in fee of real estate on the east line of South Market street in the city of San Jose, adjacent and contiguous to and abutting upon the line of said street; that said city of San Jose is a municipal corporation, and South Market street is a public street within the corporate limits thereof; that the defendant, "without right so to do, is about to commence the construction in and upon and over the said South Market street, and, without right so to do, maintain and operate a double-track street railway" thereon, and that the line of said proposed railway is in front of, adjacent to, and contiguous to said real estate of plaintiff; that, in the event of the construction, maintenance, and operation of said double-track street railway as proposed to be constructed, "the property of plaintiff and the property rights of plaintiff will be irreparably injured and damaged, in this, that the value of said property will be greatly diminished, free access in and to the said property will be irreparably impaired, and the rental value of said property greatly and permanently decreased"; that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

These are the material allegations of the complaint, and it is quite manifest that the theory upon which the complaint was framed was that the construction of said street railroad on the public street, without right, as alleged, would constitute a public nuisance, the creation of which would be specially injurious to the plaintiff. Undoubtedly a railroad constructed on a public street without authority would constitute a legal obstruction, and hence be a public nuisance (Amestoy v. Electric R. T. Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550), which any private person might sue to abate, or the threatened construction of which he might enjoin, where his property is, or will be, specially damaged or injured through its existence. This is the general rule of the authorities, and finds expression in our Code. "A private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise." Civ. Code, § 3493. In order, therefore, to warrant the maintenance of an action by a private individual to abate or restrain the construction of a public nuisance, it is not enough to allege that injury has been or will be sustained by him thereby, but it is essential that it appear by proper allegations in the complaint, to be supported by proof upon the trial, that this injury is, or will be, special in character to him; that is, that such injury will not only be greater in degree, but will be different in kind from that sustained by the public generally. Among many of the cases to this effect are Aram v. Schallenberger, 41 Cal. 449; Lewiston Turnpike Co. v. Shasta Wagon Road Co., 41 Cal. 562; Payne v. McKinley, 54 Cal. 532; McCloskey v. Kreling, 76 Cal. 511, 18 Pac. 433; Gardner v. Stroever, 89 Cal. 26, 26 Pac. 618; Siskiyou Lumber, etc., Co. v. Rostel, 121 Cal. 513, 53 Pac. 1118; Reynolds v. Presidio & Ferries Railroad Co. (Cal.) 81 Pac. 1118.

It is alleged that the defendant is about to commence the construction of the railroad on a highway upon which plaintiff's property fronts will constitute a nuisance—a public nuisance. Being a public nuisance, it was essential that, within the above rule, plaintiff distinctly avers some special injury to its property which it would sustain by its construction, before it could maintain an action for its abatement. The most common form of injury, which the owner of land abutting upon a public highway specially sustains as to his property by reason of the obstruction of the highway in front thereof, arises from the fact that such obstruction will interfere with the easement incident to his property of free access from it to the public highway. Where the obstruction of the public highway has this effect, it becomes as to the owner of property abutting thereon a private nuisance, which he may have abated. Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623, 26 Pac. 1106; Helm v. McClure, 107 Cal. 205, 40 Pac. 437. But, in order to warrant the interposition of a court of equity to grant this relief, facts must be alleged in the complaint from which it shall appear that the obstruction of the highway will be specially injurious to plaintiff's property abutting thereon, and it is quite evident that the complaint at bar does not state these facts. It is alleged that the defendants are about to commence the construction of a double-track street railroad on the street in front of the property of plaintiff without right to do so, and that by reason thereof the property rights of plaintiff will be irreparably injured, in this, that the value of the property will be greatly diminished, free access to it irreparably impaired, and the rental value permanently decreased. These allegations of irreparable injury in general, and the particular specifications relative to it, amount to nothing more than the expression of an opinion or the conclusion of the pleader. They do not constitute a statement of facts from which the court could determine whether the apprehensions of plaintiff that its property would be specially injured by the construction of the street railroad were well founded or not. General allegations of irreparable injury are never sufficient—the facts must be stated from which it will appear that irreparable injury will probably follow.

Under the authorities, no right of action could accrue to the plaintiff from the mere fact that there was an unlawful obstruction of the public highway. In order to warrant an action therefor at its instance it must appear that it is specially injured in its property by such obstruction. This right of action proceeds, not from the fact that the obstruction is a public nuisance, but because as a public nuisance it specially injures his property, and whether it does or not could only appear from a statement of facts relative to the nature of the obstruction, and from which the court could determine whether the plaintiff's claims of special injury arising therefrom were well founded or not. Now, as to the construction of said railroad: It is only alleged that defendant proposes to unlawfully construct it and operate it on the public street. The simple construction of a railroad along a public street would not necessarily injure the property abutting thereon. It would not be the creation of such a public nuisance that necessarily special injury would follow from it. If such injury would be suffered, it must proceed from the method of the construction, maintenance, or operation of the road. In the complaint, however, there is no statement as to any of these matters. It does not appear what is the width of the street over which it is proposed to construct this road; the proximity of the tracks to plaintiff's property; whether any embankments or depressions will be created preventing access to his property: or that the operation of the road itself will affect him. The complaint is silent as to any fact relative to the construction or operation of said road, or as to any fact from which it can be determined that any injury, special or otherwise, will result to the plaintiff. The complaint was defective in not having stated any facts from which it would appear that special injury to plaintiff's property would result from the creation of the alleged public nuisance, and hence the demurrer to it was properly sustained.

ANAHEIM UNION WATER CO. et al. v. FULLER et al. (L. A. 1,629.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1907.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — NATURAL WATER COURSES — RIPARIAN RIGHTS — BED AND BANK OF STREAM—RIGHT TO WATER.

The fact that land forms part of the wide bottom extending between higher lands on each side of a stream, and is underlaid by an underground flow, which is a part of the surface stream, does not make it part of the bed of the stream, nor render it nonriparian, where it has been successfully cultivated and irrigated for many years.

2. SAME—RIPARIAN OWNERS—WHO ARE RIPARIAN OWNERS.

Land not within the watershed of a stream is not riparian thereto, and is not entitled to the use or benefit of the water from the stream, although it may be part of an entire tract which does extend to the river.

3. SAME.

Where two streams unite, the rule in regard to the riparian rights therein is that each is considered as a separate stream with regard to lands abutting thereon above the junction, and that lying within the watershed of one stream above that point is not riparian to the other, even though both lie in one drainage basin and are separated only by a low tableland.

4. SAME—CONVEYANCE—RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

Where the owner of land abutting on a stream conveys to another a part of the land not contiguous to the stream, he thereby deprives the part so conveyed of riparian rights in the stream, unless the conveyance declares the contrary, and land thus severed from the stream can never regain the riparian right, although it may thereafter be conveyed to the person who owns the part abutting on the stream.

5. SAME—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—WHAT CONSTITUTES A WATER COURSE.

The fact that land lies contiguous to an underground flow connected with the surface stream does not give the owner of this land riparian rights in the surface stream.

6. SAME—APPROPRIATION AND PRESCRIPTION—DIVERSION—INJUNCTION.

A wrongful diversion of the waters of a stream will be restrained at the instance of a person having riparian rights in the stream, although no actual damages are averred or proved; the relief being granted to prevent the wrongful acts from ripening into a right.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, §§ 84, 85.]

7. SAME—DIVERSION—ACTION—INJUNCTION.

A holder of riparian rights in a stream has the right to have a wrongful diversion of the waters thereof enjoined, even though there is plenty of water remaining in the stream for his use after the wrongful diversion.

E. W. Freeman, for appellants. E. E. Keech, Richard Melrose, John D. Pope, and A. W. Hutton, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to enjoin the defendants from diverting water from the Santa Ana river. Judgment in favor of the plaintiffs as prayed for was given in the court below. The defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The plaintiffs own lands through which the Santa Ana river flows. They have been accustomed for many years to irrigate this land with waters from the river, and for that purpose there is required, during the irrigating season, a continuous flow of 400 miners' inches of water. The defendants, or some of them, own land on the river, situated above the land of the plaintiffs, and upon it they had built a dam in the river and were thereby diverting water from the stream, which, by means of a ditch, they were conducting to other lands owned by them and were there using it for irrigation. The plaintiffs claim, and the court found, that the land which the defendants were thus irrigating with water from the river was not riparian thereto. The sufficiency of the evidence to support this finding, and the question whether or not the plaintiffs' land is entitled to riparian rights in the river, are the principal questions presented upon the appeals.

1. The defendants claim that the land of the plaintiffs lies within, and constitutes a part of the bed of the stream, and contend that such land is not riparian, nor, as such, entitled to the use of the water of the stream. It appears that the land consists of good soil, capable of producing valuable crops, that it abuts on the river, and that it has been successfully cultivated and irrigated by the plaintiffs and their predecessors for many years. The only facts upon which the claim that it is nonriparian is based are that it forms part of the wide bottom extending between higher lands or bluffs on each side; that the course of the river channel is subject to changes by unusual floods, although no substantial change has occurred for 40 years last past; and that the land is all underlaid by an underground flow, in contact with, and forming a part of, the surface stream. We are of the opinion that land thus situated is not to be distinguished from other land abutting on the stream, so far as the right of the owner to the reasonable use of the water is concerned. We know of no principle of riparian rights that would except such land from its benefits, nor of any decision to that effect. The opinion in Ventura L. & P. Co. v. Meiners, 136 Cal. 284, 68 Pac. 818, 89 Am. St. Rep. 128, contains nothing that can be so construed. It appears to decide that land may be riparian to a stream, although it does not abut thereon, except when the stream is swollen by floods. Without conceding the soundness of the decision so far as it seems to decide that the owner of such land may take water from the stream, at its ordinary flow, as against other owners whose lands abut upon such ordinary stream, we think it is clear that the discussion in the opinion as to the character of the ground lying between the edge of the stream at its ordinary flow, and the line of high water when in flood, has no reference to the right of the owner of such intervening land, as a riparian owner, to use the water of the stream for any useful purpose which his position upon the stream enables him to make of it. The land here involved was not at all similar to the land described in the opinion in that case. The case of Diedrich v. N. W. U. Ry. Co., 42 Wis.

264, 24 Am. Rep. 399, is not in point. It refers to the rights of the owner of land lying wholly under the bed of a navigable lake, and holds that such owner may not erect wharves or other structures thereon which would interfere with navigation, and that, in that respect, he has not the right of one owning land along the bank of such lake to erect wharves in aid of navigation for his own use. There is nothing in that opinion to indicate that the owner of land which was under the bed of an ordinary stream might not, by virtue of the position of his land, have such benefit from the water as he could get from it. This question, however, is not involved in the case at bar, for we are of the opinion that the plaintiffs' land was not in the bed of the stream in any proper sense of the term.

2. Some distance below the land of the plaintiffs a tributary, known as "Chino creek," enters the Santa Ana river. Chino creek also has a tributary, known as "Mill creek," which enters Chino creek 1½ miles above the confluence of the latter with the Santa Ana river. The defendants take the water from the river, above the land of the plaintiffs, in a ditch which extends across the low bottom to the high land or bluff, and then extends along the bluff, at a grade less than that of the river, gradually getting further above and away from the river until it reaches and crosses the divide, or summit of the elevated land, between the watershed of the river and that of Mill creek. The court found that the land irrigated with water from this ditch lies beyond this divide, and is wholly within the watershed of Mill creek, and that it does not abut upon the stream of the Santa Ana, and is not riparian thereto. Land which is not within the watershed of the river is not riparian thereto, and is not entitled, as riparian land, to the use or benefit of the water from the river, although it may be part of an entire tract which does extend to the river. Chauvet v. Hill, 93 Cal. 410, 28 Pac. 1066; Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158; Southern Cal. I. Co. v. Wilshire, 144 Cal. 68, 77 Pac. 767; Watkins L. Co. v. Clements, 98 Tex. 578, 86 S. W. 733, 70 L. R. A. 964, 107 Am. St. Rep. 653.

The defendants claim that these findings are contrary to the evidence, and that this rule does not apply to the land they seek to irrigate, because, while it is wholly within the Mill creek watershed, it is also within the general watershed of the Santa Ana river, considered as an entirety including the valley from its sources to its mouth. This fact does not affect the case, at least so far as the land of the plaintiffs is concerned. The principal reasons for the rule confining riparian rights to that part of lands bordering on the stream which are within the watershed are that, where the water is used on such land, it will, after such use, return to the stream, so far as it is not consumed, and that, as the rainfall on such land feeds the stream, the land is in consequence entitled, so to speak, to the use of its waters. Where two streams unite, we think the correct rule to be applied, in regard to the riparian rights therein, is that each is to be considered as a separate stream, with regard to lands abutting thereon above the junction, and that land lying within the watershed of one stream above that point is not to be considered as riparian to the other stream. The fact that the streams are of different size, or that both lie in one general watershed, or drainage basin, should not affect the rule, nor should it be changed by the additional fact that the two watersheds are separated merely by the summit or crown of a comparatively low table land, or "mesa," as it is called in the evidence, and not by a sharp or well-defined ridge, range of hills, or mountains. The reasons for the rule are the same in either case. In some cases it may be difficult to distinguish the line of separation. This seems to have been a case of that sort. Nevertheless, we think there is evidence sufficient to support the finding of the court that there is a dividing line between the two watersheds, and that the land irrigated by defendants lies upon the slope which descends into Mill creek. It is not necessary to discuss this evidence in detail.

The evidence also supports the finding that the land irrigated by the defendants does not abut upon, or extend to, the river. If the owner of a tract abutting on a stream conveys to another a part of the land not contiguous to the stream, he thereby cuts off the part so conveyed from all participation in the use of the stream and from riparian rights therein, unless the conveyance declares the contrary. Land thus conveyed and severed from the stream can never regain the riparian right, although it may thereafter be reconveyed to the person who owns the part abutting on the stream, so that the two tracts are again held in one ownership. Boehmer v. Big Rock C. I. Dist., 117 Cal. 26, 48 Pac. 908; Alta Land Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 229, 24 Pac. 645, 20 Am. St. Rep. 217; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 424, 10 Pac. 674; Watkins L. Co. v. Clements, 98 Tex. 578, 86 S. W. 835, 738, 70 L. R. A. 964, 107 Am. St. Rep. 653; 2 Farnham on Waters, 1572, § 463a. All the land belonging to the defendants, including the Smith tract, which was in part irrigated, was originally a part of the Jurupa rancho, which abutted upon the river. The original owner of that rancho subdivided it by arbitrary lines, corresponding to the government surveys, and sold and conveyed it in parcels according to that survey. Under the rule above stated the conveyance by him of a tract not contiguous to the stream would sever such tract from the riparian interest and deprive it of subsequent participation in the use of the water of the river, the right to which previously attached to the entire rancho. The tract which includes the irrigated land of the defendants is not at any point contiguous to the river. At the time the action was begun it was owned by the defendant Smith. He was not the owner of any adjoining land which lay contiguous to the river. After the action was begun he conveyed this land to certain of the other defendants, some of whom owned adjoining lands extending from the Smith land to the river. This subsequent conveyance gave those defendants a continuous ownership of land extending from the river to and including the Smith land. This contiguous ownership, however, did not confer upon the Smith land the riparian rights of which it was deprived, when Smith, or his predecessors, obtained it by a conveyance which severed it from the portion of the Jurupa rancho abutting upon the river.

It seems to be contended that, for the purpose of determining what lands are riparian, the river is to be considered as including all the space through which its underground flow extends, as well as that occupied by the surface stream. It is claimed, and apparently conceded by the respondents, that the Smith tract, at one or two of its angles, extends into the low bottom under which the underground water flows or percolates, and upon this circumstance riparian rights are asserted to accrue. It is not necessary here to decide what rights to the use of the underground flow of a stream may, by virtue of its position, attach to land which abuts upon, or extends into or over such waters, but does not extend to the surface stream. We are certain that such location of the land, with relation to the stream, does not carry the right to divert water from the surface stream, conduct or transport it across intervening land to the tract thus separated from such surface stream, and there apply it to use on the latter, to the injury of lands which abut upon the proper banks of the surface stream, and hence that, even if the Smith land were within the watershed, such location upon the underground flow does not justify the diversion the defendants were making from the surface stream for use upon that tract.

3. It is further contended that the plaintiffs' land is in no wise damaged by the diversion complained of, and hence that the diversion cannot be enjoined. Upon this proposition the decisions of this court, and the general principles of law regarding injunctions, are against the theory of the defendants. In Southern Cal. I. Co. v. Wilshire, supra, speaking of the right of a lower riparian proprietor to enjoin a diversion of a part of the stream for use outside of the watershed of the stream, leaving enough in the stream for any use which had theretofore been made, or was then proposed to be made, by the lower riparian proprietor on his land, the court said: "It is not necessary in such cases for the plaintiff to show damages, in order that it may be entitled to a judgment. It is enough if it appears that the continuance of the acts of the defendants will deprive it of a right of property, a valuable part of its estate. The taking of the water beyond the watershed would, therefore, be an injury to the plaintiff's riparian right, which, under the pleadings and findings in the case, the plaintiff was entitled to have enjoined"—citing Moore v. Clear L. W. Co., 68 Cal. 146, 8 Pac. 816; Stanford v. Felt, 71 Cal. 249, 16 Pac. 900; Heilbron v. Fowler S. C. Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Conkling v. Pac. I. Co., 87 Cal. 296, 25 Pac. 399; Walker v. Emerson, 89 Cal. 456, 26 Pac. 968; Spargur v. Heard, 90 Cal. 221, 27 Pac. 198. All of these authorities fully sustain the proposition to which they are cited. In Stanford v. Felt, supra, the court says: "Nor is the owner lower down the stream required to show in order to procure an injunction, any actual present damage. The diversion, by lapse of time, may grow into a right. [Citing authorities.] To prevent such result, an injunction will be awarded." The same proposition is reiterated in the other cases. The defendants, in opposition to the above decisions, cite the case of Modoc L. & L. Co. v. Booth, 102 Cal. 151, 36 Pac. 431, and Vernon I. Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 243, 256, 39 Pac. 762. In the Modoc Case, however, it appear that "during the months of June, July, August, and September, when respondent used the small quantity of water appropriated by him, the full flow would have worked an injury rather than a benefit to appellants, and they sought to avoid the injury by maintaining expensive diverting and drainage works," to turn off the water and keep their lands from being overflowed. The decision was evidently based on the doctrine, stated in some of the decisions, that a diversion of water during times of extraordinary floods, which does not perceptibly diminish the stream below, will not be enjoined. Edgar v. Stevenson, 70 Cal. 286, 11 Pac. 704; Heilbron v. 76 L. & W. Co., 80 Cal. 194, 22 Pac. 62; Fifield v. S. V. W. W., 130 Cal. 552, 62 Pac. 1054; Black's Pom. Water Rights, § 75. Unless it can be so reconciled, the case is contrary to all the other decisions of this court above cited and to the settled principles of law, and must be disregarded. In Vernon I. Co. v. Los Angeles the plaintiff was not claiming any injury or damage by virtue of his riparian ownership, but was asserting the right to divert water for use upon lands not riparian against the city of Los Angeles, which was asserting its pueblo right, and what was said in that case, with respect to the necessity of showing injury, must be taken with the qualifications made evident by the character of the case and by the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice McFarland. The conditions existing in those cases do not exist in the case at bar. The court finds, on sufficient evidence, that the diversion of the defendants, if allowed, would render plaintiffs' land much less fertile and valuable. The defendants do not propose to limit the diversion to times of high water, but, on the contrary, they will take it during the time of its greatest scarcity. There is no question of the diversion of flood water involved in the case. The right which they assert is the right to take the ordinary water of the stream, and hence the doctrine of the Modoc Case does not apply.

On this point the defendants cite several cases in which it is held that a lower riparian owner cannot enjoin a diversion by another riparian proprietor above, unless he can show that such diversion works damage to him, and that it is more than a just proportion of the water to which the upper owner is entitled. Such decisions are not applicable to this case. Riparian owners have correlative rights in the stream, and neither is a trespasser against the other until he diverts more than his share and injures and damages the other thereby. Here the defendants were not, with respect to the land irrigated, riparian owners, but were trespassers on plaintiffs' property rights from the beginning, and the continuance of the trespass for a sufficient time would divest the right of the plaintiffs with respect to the water diverted. The same distinction exists with respect to cases cited involving the taking of percolating water for use by one owner upon his land, to the detriment of other land over the same saturated plane. The rights in such cases are correlative, and, if an injunction can issue at all therein, it can be only when one owner takes more than his due proportion and damage to the other ensues from such excessive taking.

The defendants urge that inasmuch as the plaintiffs need but 400 inches of water for their land, and there remained in the stream, after defendants' diversion, more than 2000 inches, which flows down to and beyond the plaintiffs' land, and which is more than they can possibly use thereon, that it therefore follows that no damage can ever ensue, even if the diversion is unlawful and should ripen into a prescriptive right by continuance; and hence that their diversion should not be enjoined. The theory of the law of riparian rights in this state is that the water of a stream belongs by a sort of common right to the several riparian owners along the stream; each being entitled to sever his share for use on his riparian land. The fact that a large quantity of water flows down the stream by and beyond the plaintiffs' land does not prove that it goes to waste, nor that the plaintiffs are entitled to take a part of it, as against other riparian owners or users below. Nor can it be said that plaintiffs, on account of the present abundance, could safely permit defendants to acquire, as against them, a right to a part of the water. The riparian right is not lost by disuse, and other riparian owners above may take or others below may be entitled to take, and may insist upon being allowed to take, all of the stream, excepting only sufficient for the plaintiffs' land. In either alternative, the taking of a part of the water by the defendants would not leave enough for the plaintiffs' use. There is nothing in this case to show how much water is required above and below by those having rights in the stream. In view of the well-known aridity of the climate, and the high state of cultivation in the vicinity, the court could almost take judicial notice that in years of ordinary rainfall there is no surplus of water in the stream over that used by the various owners under claim of right. But, however this may be, it is settled by the decisions above cited that a party, situated as the plaintiffs are, can enjoin an unlawful diversion, in order to protect and preserve his riparian right.

The findings support the judgment, and we are unable to perceive any substantial or material conflict in them. We find no error in the record.

BUILDERS' SUPPLY DEPOT et al. v. O'CONNOR et al. (No. 3,903.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien for material and labor furnished by subcontractors, it was error to enter a personal judgment against the landowner; the claim being enforceable only against the land.

2. SAME—SET-OFFS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, provides, in relation to mechanics' liens, that as to all liens, except that of the contractor, the whole contract price shall not be diminished by any prior or subsequent indebtedness, offset, or counterclaim in favor of the reputed owner, and against the contractor. Held, that the statute refers to offsets not arising under the terms of the contract, and the owner, in a suit by a subcontractor, is entitled to set off damages because of the delay in the completion of the building as required by the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 447, 448.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAW.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1021, provides that the measure and mode of compensation of attorneys is left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties. Section 1195 provides that, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the court must allow, as a part of the costs, reasonable attorney's fees, to each lien claimant whose lien is established. Held, that section 1195 is violative of the federal Constitution, guarantying to every person the equal protection of the law.

4. STATUTES—SPECIAL LAWS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1195, is violative of the state Constitution, providing that general laws shall be uniform, and prohibiting special laws.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—RIGHT TO ACQUIRE PROPERTY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1195, is violative of the state Constitution, declaring the unalienable rights of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property.

6. MECHANICS' LIENS—COSTS.

The statute providing for an allowance, to successful claimants in mechanics' lien cases, of the expense of filing their liens, is not unconstitutional.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Builders' Supply Depot and others against Dennis O'Connor and others, being three mechanics' lien cases, which were consolidated and tried together, and Dennis O'Connor and Mary O'Connor, the owners of the land, appeal from a judgment against them. Reversed.

Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for appellants. Barna McKinne, Maurice L. Asher, Wal. J. Tuska, and J. E. Crane, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Three mechanics' lien cases were consolidated and tried together, and judgment was rendered against Dennis O'Connor and Mary O'Connor, the owners of the land involved, who appeal from the judgment.

The judgment must be reversed for the following reasons:

1. The actions were not brought by the original contractor; they were all brought for material and labor furnished by plaintiffs as sub-contractors. Nevertheless personal judgments were rendered against the appellants. This was error, as plaintiffs were entitled only to enforce their claims against the land.

2. There was a written contract between appellants, as owners of the land, and the contractors, Barth & Scarf, for the construction of a certain building thereon. This contract was regular in form and was recorded as provided by the Code, and it is admitted that the rights of all parties rest on said contract; the contract providing that the building was to be built for $7,500, and to be finished in five months—and if not finished within the five months the owners were to be allowed whatever damages the delay should cause. The building was not finished until about 2½ months after the stipulated time, and appellants averred and offered evidence to prove that they were damaged by the delay in the sum of $359.50. Respondents objected to this evidence, and the court sustained the objection upon the ground that appellants could not avail themselves of the damage, even if proved, because of a clause in section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure that, "As to all liens, except that of the contractor, the whole contract price shall not be diminished by any prior or subsequent indebtedness, offset, or counterclaim, in favor of the reputed owner and against the contractor." But it was definitely settled, in Hampton v. Christensen, 84 Pac. 200, 148 Cal. 729, that damages for failure of the contractor to finish the work within the time specified in the written contract may be deducted by the owners as against lienholders, and that "the clause has reference, in the first place to offsets not arising under the terms of the contract, and as to which, from an inspection of the contract, materialmen and laborers could have no notice." The opinion in that case is quite full on the point, and we need not further discuss it here. The appellants were therefore entitled to deduct from the amount of the money remaining in their hands whatever damages they suffered for the delay in finishing the building, and the court erred in refusing to allow them to introduce evidence of such damage.

3. The court allowed an attorney's fee in each of the cases, and appellants contend that such allowance was erroneous because the statutory provision directing the allowance of such a fee is unconstitutional and void. In our opinion this contention must be sustained. In a few instances this court has affirmed judgments for plaintiffs in mechanics' lien cases which included attorney's fees; but our attention has not been called to any case where the question of the constitutionality of the statute providing for such fees has been raised, or presented to the court for adjudication. In the case at bar the question has been for the first time raised.

The statutory provision in question is found in section 1195, Code Civ. Proc., and is as follows: "The court must also allow, as a part of the costs, * * * reasonable attorneys' fees * * * to be allowed to each lien claimant whose lien is established, whether he be plaintiff or defendant." It is to be noticed that this section provides for an attorney's fee to plaintiff, but not to defendant, even though the latter be successful in the action, and that attorney's fees are allowed even to plaintiff, only in actions under the mechanics' lien law; the general rule being that "the measure and mode of compensation of attorneys and counselors at law is left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties." Code Civ. Proc. § 1021. This provision is, in our opinion, violative both of the federal and the state Constitutions—of the 14th amendment of the former, which guaranties to every person "the equal protection of the law," and of the provisions of the state Constitution which provide that general laws shall be uniform, prohibit special laws, and declare the inalienable rights of all men of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property. A statute which gives an attorney's fee to one party in an action and denies it to the other, and allows such fee in one kind of action and not in other kinds of actions where, as in the statute here in question, the distinction is not founded on constitutional or natural differences, is clearly violative of the constitutional provisions above noticed. That said law is violative of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution was established by the Supreme Court of the United States in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666. In that case the statute of the state of Texas allowing attorney's fee to any person having a bona fide claim against a railroad company for services, or for damages, or for stock killed, was held to be unconstitutional because violative of the said fourteenth amendment. The court, speaking of the statute, said: "It is simply a statute imposing a penalty upon railroad corporations for a failure to pay certain debts. No individuals are thus punished, and no other corporations. The act singles out a certain class of debtors and punishes them when for like delinquencies it punishes no others. They are not treated as other debtors, or equally with other debtors. They cannot appeal to the courts as other litigants under like conditions and with like protection. If litigation terminates adversely to them, they are mulcted in the attorneys' fees of the successful plaintiff; if it terminates in their favor, they recover no attorneys' fees. It is no sufficient answer to say that they are punished only when adjudged to be in the wrong. They do not enter the courts upon equal terms. They must pay attorney's fees if wrong. They do not recover any if right; while their adversaries recover, if right, and pay nothing, if wrong. In the suits, therefore, to which they are parties, they are discriminated against, and are not treated as others. They do not stand equal before the law. They do not receive its equal protection. All this is obvious from a mere inspection of the statute."

In the decisions of several states a statute similar to the one involved has been held unconstitutional. The question is elaborately discussed by the Supreme Court of Colorado, in Davidson v. Jennings, 60 Pac. 354, 27 Colo. 187, 48 L. R. A. 340, 83 Am. St. Rep. 49, and a statute of that state similar to ours declared void. The opinion rendered in the case is an exhaustive one, and we will make only a few quotations from it. After stating the statutory provisions, the court says: "It will be seen that this section imposes a penalty upon the defendant for exercising, in this class of cases, the common right of making a defense, which is accorded to every other litigant in the courts, by subjecting him to the payment of the plaintiff's attorney's fees if he is successful, without giving him (the defendant) a reciprocal right if he is victorious." And the court further says: "We are unable to perceive any reason why, in actions to enforce their claims for merchandise or material furnished in the erection of a house or for the development of a mining claim, they should be afforded any other or greater rights than are given other merchants who furnish provisions or supplies to persons for family consumption, or that their debtors should not have the same right to contest the justice of their claims upon the same terms and conditions as are afforded to other debtors by the general law of the land. It is no answer to say that the debtor may avoid the imposition of this additional cost by paying his honest debts, because the very purpose of the litigation he invokes is to determine whether he owes the debt or not. And it is immaterial whether he successfully defeats the larger part of the claim. He may, nevertheless, be mulcted in a sum which will deprive him of any benefit from the defense which he has legitimately established. It is also equally immaterial whether he interposes a vexatious defense or makes an honest though unsuccessful one, or allows judgment to be taken against him by default. He is subjected to the same penalty." Many cases are cited which sustain the opinion. This case was afterwards expressly approved by the courts of Colorado. See Perkins v. Boyd, 65 Pac. 350, 16 Colo. App. 266, and cases there cited.

In Atkinson v. Woodmansee, 74 Pac. 640, 68 Kan. 71, 64 L. R. A. 325, the Supreme Court of Kansas held unconstitutional a clause of a Kansas statute as follows: "In any action brought by any artisan or day laborer to enforce any lien under this act, where judgment be rendered for plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court, which shall be taxed as costs in the action." It will be observed that in this statute the special advantage is given only to the "artisan or day laborer," and not to materialmen who constitute the main lien claimants in California; but the provision was, nevertheless, held void. The court says: "Under the Constitution of the state of Kansas, artisan and owner, contractor and laborer, are each one possessed of equal and inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. * * * The burden of the law upon them should be as equal and impartial as the law of gravitation, and yet, in the baldest and most arbitrary manner imaginable, this act singles out a certain class of debtors and punishes them, when for like delinquencies it punishes no others"—and then follows a quotation from the case of Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Ellis, above noticed.

In Hocking Val. Coal Co. v. Rosser, 41 N. E. 263, 53 Ohio St. 12, 29 L. R. A. 386, the Supreme Court of Ohio held unconstitutional a statute providing that in an action for wages the plaintiff should recover an attorney's fee. The court said: "Upon what principle can a rule of law rest which permits one party, or class of people, to invoke the action of our tribunals of justice at will, while the other party, or another class of citizens, does so at the peril of being mulcted in an attorney's fee, if an honest but unsuccessful defense should be interposed? A statute that imposes this restriction upon one citizen, or class of citizens, only denies to him or them the equal protection of the law." And, further, the court say: "Judicial tribunals are provided for the equal protection of every suitor. The right to retain property already in possession is as sacred as the right to recover it when dispossessed. The right to defend against an action to recover money is as necessary as the right to defend one brought to recover specific, real or personal property. An adverse result in either case deprives the defeated party of property."

In Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 43 N. W. 1006, 77 Mich. 104, the Supreme Court of Michigan held that a statute authorizing an attorney's fee to be taxed to the party in a judgment for personal services was unconstitutional—being an attempt to give special advantages to one class at the expense of another. In Wilder v. Chicago Ry. Co., 38 N. W. 289, 70 Mich. 382, the Supreme Court of Michigan held that an act authorizing an attorney's fee against a railroad company in an action for injury to stock was unconstitutional and void. In Openshaw v. Halfin, 68 Pac. 138, 24 Utah, 426, 91 Am. St. Rep. 796, the Supreme Court of Utah held that a statute allowing attorney's fees to plaintiff in an action to compel the release of a mortgage was unconstitutional as special legislation, and violative of the constitutional principle of equal protection to all. See, also, Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500.

In the opinions rendered in the cases above noticed there are many citations of authorities sustaining the opinions; but we have been unable to verify these citations on account of the difficulty of access to books since the recent destruction here by fire of law libraries. We are satisfied with the reasoning on the point in the cases which we have cited and quoted from, and deem it unnecessary to discuss the matter further. Upon the three grounds above stated the judgment must be reversed.

Appellants also make the contention that the court erred in allowing plaintiffs as costs the expense of filing their liens, upon the ground that the statute providing therefor is unconstitutional; but in our opinion this contention is not maintainable. The Constitution imposes upon the Legislature the duty of providing for these liens, and, as the filing of the liens is part of the legislative method of perfecting them, we think that the small expense of such filing is properly included in the phrase "costs and disbursements."

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1907.)

1. Exceptions, Bill of—Authority to Allow or Settle — Judges — Disqualification to Act—Relationship to Attorney.

Code, Civ. Proc. § 170, provides that "any" judge related within the third degree to defendant's attorney is disqualified from sitting in any action or proceeding, except as to "the arrangement of the calendar" or "regulation of the order of business." Section 1054 provides that orders extending the time for filing and serving bills of exception settled for use on motion for new trial or appeal from the judgment may be made by the judge of the county where the action is pending. Held, that such order extending time for filing bill is not embraced in its exceptions.

2. New Trial—Failure to File Statement—Motion for Relief—Waiver.

Where plaintiff, at the time its motion for a new trial was argued, made a conditional motion to be relieved from failure to serve its proposed statement in time, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, but did not press the motion to a ruling by the court, but submitted its case upon the record then existing, it waived and abandoned such motion.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Hiram D. Tuttle, Judge.

Corbet & Goodwin and E. F. Fitzpatrick, for appellant. Chas. S. Peery and R. H. McGowan (Galpin & Bolton, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, in an action brought and tried in the superior court of San Mateo county upon a policy of insurance against loss by fire. The only matters discussed in appellant's brief are as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and instructions given to the jury. It was attempted to present the questions so discussed by bill of exceptions settled for use on the motion for a new trial. It is claimed that appellant's proposed bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial was not served within the time provided by law, and, therefore, could not be considered either on the appeal from the judgment, or on the motion for new trial, or the appeal from the order denying such motion. This objection was never waived by plaintiff. Upon this ground plaintiff objected to the hearing of the motion for a new trial in the lower court, and moved to dismiss all proceedings thereunder, but the court refused to dismiss on this ground, heard the motion for a new trial, and denied it. If there was no bill of exceptions which could be considered on the motion for a new trial, the order denying the new trial must be affirmed, for otherwise no error is shown in the action of the lower court. The same is true as to the judgment appealed from.

We can see no good answer to the claim that appellant's proposed bill of exceptions was not served in time. Concededly it was not served in time unless an order attempted to be made granting appellant an extension of time within which to serve it was valid. This order was made September 7, 1904, by the judge of the superior court of San Mateo county. By reason of the fact that said judge was related to an attorney for appellant, by affinity within the third degree, he was, by express provision of statute, prohibited from sitting or acting as judge in the case, and for this reason a judge of the superior court of Santa Clara county had presided at the trial of said action. The language of our statute upon the subject (Code Civ. Proc. § 170), as it existed at the time of this order and until the amendment of 1905, was, so far as is here material: "No justice, judge or justice of the peace shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: * * * (2) When he is related to either party, * * * or to an attorney, counsel, or agent of either party, by consanguinity or affinity, within the third degree, computed according to the rules of law. * * * But the provisions of this section shall not apply to the arrangement of the calendar, or to the regulation of the order of business, nor the power of transferring an action or proceeding to some other court, or the hearing upon such affidavits and counter affidavits" (affidavits alleging and denying bias or prejudice). The statute thus expressly stating the exceptional matters as to which a disqualified judge may act, it must be taken as specifying all such matters, and as absolutely prohibiting the disqualified judge from performing any judicial act not included in the exceptions designated. See People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 77; Estate of White, 37 Cal. 190, 192. The making of an order under section 1054, Code Civ. Proc., extending the time allowed by that Code within which an act in an action or proceeding may be done, is a judicial act, involving the exercise of judicial discretion. Such an order may be made by the judge only "upon good cause shown" to him. He is the sole judge of the sufficiency of the showing, and when he makes such order, he judicially determines the showing to be sufficient, and as a result thereof grants a privilege to one of the parties to the action to which such party would not otherwise be entitled. He thus judicially acts in an action in which he is disqualified to act at all, other than as specified in the exceptions enumerated in the statute. By no reasonable construction of the language used can the making of such an order be held to fall within any of the enumerated exceptions. It is not an order relative to the "arrangement of the calendar" or a "regulation of the order of business," and manifestly no other exception stated could possibly apply. The case before us is, in this respect, precisely the same as that of Frevert v. Swift, 19 Nev. 363, 11 Pac. 273, where it was held, upon a substantially similar statute, that an order of this character could not be made by a judge who was disquaified to act in the case. The reasoning of the opinion in that case appears conclusive to us.

It is suggested that as section 1054, Code Civ. Proc., provides that orders extending time may be made "by the judge of the superior court of the county in which the action is pending, or by the judge who presided at the trial," it was intended to allow the judge of the county, even though disqualified, to make the same; but we are satisfied that the provisions of this section must be read subject to the express prohibition of section 170, Code Civ. Proc., to the effect that no judge shall sit or act in any proceeding wherein he is disqualified by the provisions of that section, other than in the specially excepted cases enumerated therein. The judge of the superior court of San Mateo county was, therefore, without power to make the order extending time. It is overwhelmingly settled that under statutes like our section 170, Code Civ. Proc., as the same existed prior to its amendment in 1905, expressly prohibiting a judge from sitting or acting in certain specified cases, any act of the disqualified judge in violation of the provisions of the statute, is absolutely void wherever brought in question. See note Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 126. See, also, Frevert v. Swift, supra; People v. De la Guerra, supra.

The order extending time within which to serve the proposed bill of exceptions was absolutely void. The proposed bill of exceptions was, therefore, not served in time. In the absence of an order relieving appellant under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., from the effect of the default, upon a proper showing made, the bill should not have been settled or considered on the motion for a new trial. No order relieving appellant from such default has ever been made. There is therefore no legally settled bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial which can now be considered, or which could have been considered on the hearing of the motion for a new trial in the court below. Regardless of the reasons which may have actuated the trial court in denying the motion for new trial, the denial of the motion was necessarily correct, there being no legally settled bill of exceptions or statement showing any error on the trial.

It appears from the bill of exceptions settled on the hearing of the motion to dismiss appellant's proceedings for a new trial, that, at the time the motion was argued and submitted, appellant did make a conditional motion to be relieved from the effect of the failure to serve its proposed statement in time, "if there was such failure," upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence and excusable neglect, and supported such motion by affidavit, which affidavit is not contained in the record. It affirmatively appears from the bill that the trial court never ruled on this conditional motion for relief, and denied the motion for dismissal solely on the ground that there was no default, and appellant acquiesced in this action of the court, not even excepting to the failure to rule upon the motion for relief. It is now suggested that the case may be remanded with directions to the court below to pass upon the motion for relief. We are satisfied that it must be held that the appellant, by thus acquiescing in the action of the trial court and voluntarily submitting its motion for a new trial upon such legal record as then existed, waived and abandoned its motion for relief under section 473, Code Civ. Proc.

1. TRUSTS—RIGHT TO FOLLOW TRUST PROPERTY OR PROCEEDS—TRUST PROPERTY TRANSFERRED TO THIRD PERSONS.

Defendant's intestate, acting for himself and as the agent and trustee of a second party took a note in which the second party had an interest because of having furnished a part of the consideration for the same. He pledged it to a bank as security for a loan to himself and the bank collected it when due. Held, that where the bank had notice of the second party's interest before it had paid over the money collected, it was bound to account to the second party for the proceeds collected after it had been fully paid its loan to defendant's intestate.

Where a bank collected a part of the amount due on a note pledged to it, a party having an interest in the note because of having furnished part of the consideration therefor, has a right, after notice to the bank of his interest, to have his proportionate share of whatever was collected.

3. SAME—ACTIONS—DEFENSES.

Where a bank collects money on a note pledged to it by a person since deceased, and before distribution of the funds has notice of the claim of a second party to part of the proceeds collected on the note, it becomes liable to account to the second party for his share of the amount collected, and the fact that a contingent claim for this amount had been filed and allowed by the executor of the deceased does not bar an action by the second party against the bank to recover his share of the proceeds collected on the note.

4. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

Where a proposed amendment to an answer was such as was within the discretion of the court, the refusal to allow it will not be disturbed by the Appellate Court, where no abuse of discretion is shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Louisa J. Thompson and others against the Bank of California and another in which A. M. Drown, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William W. Thompson, deceased, intervened. Judgment for intervener, against defendant bank and defendant, Teresa Bell, as administratrix of the estate of Thomas Bell deceased, appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. James M. Allen, for respondent intervener bank. Drown, Leicester & Drown, for respondent Thompson.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs are heirs at law of William N. Thompson, deceased. Intervener A. N. Drown is administrator with the will annexed of the estate of said Thompson, deceased. Teresa Bell was joined as a defendant in the action as special administratrix of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, but was later substituted as administratrix with the will annexed of said Bell, and the action as to defendant George Staacke, formerly executor of the will of said Bell, was dismissed. Objection was made by defendant Teresa Bell to plaintiffs prosecuting the action on the ground that Drown had been appointed administrator of the estate of Thompson, deceased, and had filed his complaint in intervention setting up the same cause of action as that of plaintiffs. The cause was tried upon the issues presented by the complaint of intervener Drown and the answer thereto by defendant Teresa Bell as administratrix. The defendant bank denied the averments of the complaint in intervention except as to the demand alleged to have been made upon it by the intervener. The cause was tried by the court without a jury and the intervener had judgment against defendant bank, from which defendant Teresa Bell, administratrix, alone appeals and comes here on a bill of exceptions.

The complaint of intervener and the answer of Teresa Bell present the issues in the case. These pleadings are somewhat voluminous, but the facts essential to a clear understanding of the issues may be considerably abbreviated. The complaint set forth: That on November 19, 1891, one L. L. Robinson, being indebted to said Thomas Bell in the sum of $28,262.18 and to said Wm. N. Thompson in the further sum of $1,000, executed on said date to Bell, acting for himself and also as the agent and trustee of Thompson, his promissory note for the sum of $29,262.18, the aggregate of the two above sums, said note to bear 5 per cent. interest. Facts are fully set forth showing a fiduciary relation to have existed on the part of Bell towards Thompson prior to November 19, 1891, and subsequently and up to the day of Bell's death, and that Bell was the financial agent of Thompson in California and managed the latter's property, and was charged with the collection of said $1,000 by Thompson, and that it was pursuant to said fiduciary relation that Bell took the said Robinson note in his own name, but that although the said note was in his own name, it was held by Bell as owned in common according to their said respective interests therein; that prior to Bell's death he became indebted to defendant bank, and to secure his said indebtedness he pledged the said note to defendant bank without the knowledge or consent of Thompson, but with the knowledge of the defendant bank; that said note was owned in common with Bell, and that Bell held Thompson's interest therein as the agent and trustee of Thompson; that Bell died October 16, 1892, and that the executors of his will were duly notified of Thompson's interest in said note, and after investigation acknowledged that he had such interest therein; that the said executors of the will of Bell resigned or were removed, and defendant Teresa Bell became administratrix of his estate; that Thompson died October 15, 1897, and intervener was duly appointed administrator of his estate with will annexed; that about November 5, 1900, and before said note or the indebtedness evidenced thereby, or any part thereof, had been paid to defendant bank, plaintiffs in the action notified it of the aforesaid facts as to Thompson's interest in said note, and that prior to the filing of the complaint in intervention, intervener made demand upon defendant bank for the said sum of $1,000 and interest thereon, but said defendant refused payment thereof; that about the 8th day of December, 1900, defendant bank collected the aforesaid promissory note so held by it as security, to wit: the whole of the principal and a portion of the interest, said amount so collected exceeding by more than $1,500 the amount for which said promissory note was held as security, which said surplus now remains in the hands of said bank and belongs to the estate of said Thompson, deceased, to the extent of said $1,000 and interest thereupon; that the said Teresa, as administratrix, repudiates the claim of intervener thereto, and claims that the whole of said surplus should be paid to her for the benefit of the said estate of Bell, deceased; that intervener is unable to state the amount of interest paid on said note, but that he is entitled to receive a proportionate share thereof; that the estate of Bell is insolvent, as is also the said Teresa, and that, if said surplus were turned over to her, intervener would be unable to recover the said sum of $1,000 or the interest thereon or any part thereof. Intervener prays for judgment for the sum of $1,000 and interest collected or received thereon by defendant bank; that defendant bank be required to account to intervener for all moneys collected or received by it on said promissory note, and that he recover his proportion or share of said moneys; that the court adjudge the rights of all parties in and to the said promissory note and the indebtedness evidenced thereby. Prayer also for general relief.

The answer to the complaint in intervention denies most of its averments. As separate defenses it avers that whatever money Bell owed Thompson at the death of the former was loaned to him by Thompson, and the indebtedness was for money had and received. As a further and separate defense, it is alleged that said Thompson as a creditor of the Bell estate presented for allowance to the executors thereof "a certain contingent claim for the sum of $1,000, contingent upon the payment to the estate of the said Thomas Bell of the said note of L. L. Robinson described in the complaint of intervention for the sum of $29,262.18," which said contingent claim was allowed by said executors and approved by the court. For a further defense, it is alleged that, after the death of Bell, to wit, on February 13, 1893, Thompson presented to said executors his claim, as creditor of said estate of Bell, deceased, wherein he stated that there was on October 16, 1892, a balance on account due and owing to him in the sum of $3,561.63; that the said executors paid the said claim in the month of May, 1893, without any order of the court; that there are other claims against said estate which have never been paid; that the estate is unsettled and the assets thereof are insufficient to pay other claimants "as much on their respective claims as the said Thompson has been paid on his claim as aforesaid." It is not alleged that the said claim for $3,561.63 included the amount now claimed or any part of it. Further answering, defendant Teresa pleads this latter sum as a counterclaim. The court made findings substantially as alleged in the complaint in intervention; that defendant bank collected on the Robinson note on December 7, 1900, the sum of $30,847.18, and thereafter on September 3, 1901, it collected the further sum of $8,325.12, in all $39,172.30, of which $9,910.12 was collected on account of interest; that the total amount received by defendant bank "exceeded by more than $1,500.00 the amount of all indebtedness due or payable to it and secured by the said pledge of said note so made to it by said Thomas Bell"; that of the said sum of $29,262.18, the principal of said security note, $1,000 belongs to and is part of the estate of Thompson, deceased, and of the sum of $9,910.12 collected as interest, the sum of $338.55 belongs to said estate. Judgment passed for intervener for the sum of $1,338.55 against defendant bank, with costs of suit, and that plaintiff take nothing by the action against defendants and intervener. No errors of law in the admission or rejection of testimony are claimed in defendant's brief, and there are no specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. The inquiry is therefore confined to the sufficiency of the findings, and to such questions of law as are properly raised by defendant.

1. It is contended that because the court failed to find that the Robinson note was pledged without the consent of Thompson, and failed to find that the bank had notice at the time of the pledge of Thompson's interest in the property pledged, the judgment has no sufficient support. There was evidence, and the court found that before the bank had paid over any of the money collected on the Robinson note it had notice of Thompson's interest in it. To the extent of that interest the bank was under obligation to account to Thompson after it had been fully paid its loan to Bell. The fact that the bank had or had not notice does not concern Bell's administratrix for she stands in no better position than did Bell in his lifetime, and he certainly would not have been heard to dispute Thompson's interest in the pledged note simply because in pledging it he failed to notify the bank of the fact. This want of notice was a fact of which the bank might have taken advantage had it, without notice, used the money to discharge Bell's indebtedness to it and had paid to him the surplus remaining. The evidence was that Bell in his lifetime acknowledged Thompson's interest in the note, and we fail to see how Bell could divest Thompson of that interest, as between themselves, by pledging the note to the bank. The court made no specific finding that at the time of the pledge the bank had notice as to the alleged fiduciary relation subsisting between Bell and Thompson, and it is urged for this reason the bank cannot be charged with any trust. It is further contended that the judgment is based upon the theory of some contractual relation existing between the bank and intervener. The facts proven were that Thompson had a property interest in the Robinson note to the day of Thompson's death, and that Thompson provided part of the consideration for the note which Bell acknowledged. That Bell became a trustee for Thompson to the extent of this property interest the evidence clearly shows. Under familiar principles of equity jurisprudence a resulting trust arose in favor of Thompson, upon his furnishing the consideration for the Robinson note, to the extent of that consideration, for the principles of equity to which resulting trusts in real estate are subject are equally applicable to personal property. 1 Perry on Trusts, §§ 126, 130. See, also, 1 Beach on Trusts & Trustees, §§ 52, 177. And a court of equity will enforce a trust against all persons who, with notice of the trust, come into possession of the trust property, in the same manner and to the same effect as against the original trustee. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141, and cases cited in notes on California Reports. See, also, 1 Perry on Trusts, § 127; 2 Perry on Trusts, §§ 837, 838; Sharpstein v. Friedlander, 63 Cal. 78. Also Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215, cited in the briefs, an instructive case which fully confirms the soundness of the above principles. Among other things, the court said: "It is undeniable that equity will follow a fund through any number of transmutations and preserve it for the owner so long as it can be identified. And it does not matter in whose name the legal right stands. If money has been converted by a trustee or agent into a chose in action the legal right to it may have been changed, but equity regards the beneficial ownership. It is conceded, for the cases abundantly show it, that when the bank received deposits, it thereby became a debtor to the depositor. The debt might have been paid in answer to his checks, and thus the liability have been extinguished in the absence of interference of his principals, to whom the money belonged. But surely it cannot be maintained that when the principals asserted their right to the money before its repayment, and gave notice to the bank of their ownership, and of their unwillingness that the money should be paid to their agent, his right to reclaim it had not ceased. A bank can be in no better situation than any other debtor. If an agent receives money of his principal, and lends it, taking a promissory note to himself, the note belongs to the principal, and the borrower may not pay the agent after he has been informed that there is a superior right and has received notice not to pay the agent"—citing Story on Equity, § 1259. It is not necessary, to support the judgment, that it be found that at the time the bank received the note it was informed of the trust relation between Bell and Thompson. The bank had notice of Thompson's claim before it had disposed of the proceeds of the Robinson note, and that was sufficient to charge it with liability to Thompson.

2. It is contended that by computing interest on the Robinson note up to the date of the last collection, it would appear that there still remained uncollected over $6,000; that the findings do not show from whom the bank collected the two sums above stated on account of said note, whether from Robinson himself or from his estate or other source, or whether Robinson or his estate was insolvent. It is hence argued that "no principle of law or rule of equity would authorize the intervener as administrator of the estate of Thompson to take from the bank money which it had as the pledgee and agent of Bell collected as a part due upon the Robinson note." Appellant claims that the bank should turn over to the Bell estate the balance in its hands and Thompson's estate should look to Robinson or his estate for the balance due upon the Robinson note remaining uncollected, as it was more than sufficient to pay the $1,000 and interest claimed by Thompson. We cannot agree with appellant. Conceding that the bank did not collect the full face value and interest of the Robinson note, still Thompson was entitled to have his proportionate share of whatever was collected. The amount was sufficient to pay the principal due both Bell and Thompson and the interest collected was apportioned according to their respective interests. The finding of the court is that the amount collected by the bank "consists of, and was and is made up of, the whole of said principal sum of $29,262.18 mentioned in said note, and the sum of $9,910.12 on account of the accrued interest," and this application of the money collected by the bank, as we understand the evidence, was in accordance with the express provisions of the note. No reason occurs to us in support of appellant's contention that all the money collected should have been turned over to the Bell estate and Thompson be compelled to look to Robinson or his estate. The bank was under the same obligation to account to Thompson, having notice of his rights, as Bell would have been had he collected the money. The complaint of appellant that intervener is availing himself of the services of the bank in collecting the amount due Thompson, has no merit. If these services had value, appellant had the benefit equally with Thompson's estate.

3. It is urged that the court erred in sustaining intervener's demurrer to the defenses set forth in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the answer of defendant Teresa Bell. These defenses have already been mentioned, and related to the claims filed by Thompson with the executor of Bell's estate. As to the claim for $1,000, it was presented as contingent and its allowance was upon the happening of the contingency, to wit, that the payment of the Robinson note might be made to the Bell estate. It was not alleged that the payment had been made or would be made. On the contrary, it appeared, and the court found, that the money due on the claim had been collected by the defendant bank, in whose hands the money still was. Of what materiality was it that the claim was then pending or allowed in the Bell estate? This action was intended to and will finally determine every question arising out of the claim and the judgment will forever discharge the Bell estate from any liability thereon. It is true, that in a sense the approval and allowance of a claim against an estate is a judgment, but it was said in Morton v. Adams, 124 Cal. 229, 56 Pac. 1038, 71 Am. St. Rep. 53: "The allowance of a claim is not in any true sense a judgment." In Estate of Glenn, 74 Cal. 567, 16 Pac. 396, cases were cited to show "that for some purposes the allowance of a claim is a judgment." The fact that the allowance and approval may be contested at subsequent stages of the proceedings in probate (Estate of Lohse, 62 Cal. 413) shows that the allowance is not a final judgment in the full sense of that term. In the present case, where the allowance was of a contingent claim, it could not in its very nature be regarded as a judgment upon which payment could be ordered, for the simple reason that until the happening of the contingency no liability of the estate of Bell could arise on the claim as alleged. This action is primarily against the bank to recover money in its hands belonging to the estate of Thompson. The only reason existing for making the administratrix of Bell's estate a party was because she made some claim to the funds. Thompson did not by presenting his claim to the Bell estate part with his right to enforce it from the person primarily liable, as the bank had become by collecting the money, nor did he give to the representative of Bell the exclusive right to collect the money from the bank. Admittedly the Bell estate is unable to pay its creditors in full, and to drive intervener to that estate for what is justly due the Thompson estate would be unjust to the latter and result in loss to it. Furthermore, Thompson had no assurance that his interest in the Robinson note would be acknowledged by Bell's representatives and hence the prudential step taken by him in presenting the claim was but a natural one to determine their attitude towards the claim. Its allowance simply settled the matter as between them and him and gave him the assurance that if the money came into their hands his claim to it would be recognized. But we cannot bring ourselves to believe that he was thus barred of his right or estopped to enforce payment from the bank. We think the matter set up by way of special defense was immaterial, and that the demurrer to it was properly sustained. We find nothing in Holt Mfg. Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 42 Pac. 435, inconsistent with the foregoing. The case of Louis v. Triscony, 58 Cal. 304, more nearly approaches the present case. There the survivor of two joint makers of a note was sued and he pleaded that the note had been presented to the administrator of the deceased maker and had been allowed as a claim against his estate. It was held that the facts pleaded did not constitute a defense.

4. Appellant moved to amend her answer at the trial, and her motion was refused. The allowance of the proposed amendment was not such as could have been demanded as of right and was within the discretion of the court, with which we will not interfere unless abuse be shown. 1 Spelling's New Trial, § 107. There is nothing in the record, except the proposed amendment, from which we may judge of its materiality to the defense or of the reason for not offering it before the trial commenced. The amendment was by way of pleading with greater particularity the contingent claim already commented upon, and, if we are right in the conclusions already stated, the proposed amendment offered no defense to the action, and was immaterial.

5. Paragraph 14 of appellant's answer, to which the demurrer was sustained, set forth the presentation by Thompson and the allowance and payment to him of a claim already mentioned. There is no allegation that this $1,000 claim was included in it and no presumption can arise that it was so included. It is alleged that the claim set out in paragraph 14 was paid in May, 1893, by the Bell executors, and yet appellant shows by her proposed amendment that the contingent claim for $1,000 was allowed and approved by these same executors in June, 1893. It is not probable that they would have taken this action if this same amount had been included in the other claim paid by them.

4 Cal. App. 655

GOYTINO v. McALEER et al. (Civ. 326.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District. California. December 31, 1906.)

1. Municipal Corporations—Police Power—Pool Halls.

Since the business of conducting a pool hall is not a useful employment, and is not always unattended with uses injurious to public peace and morals, an ordinance authorizing the police commissioners to make such regulations for granting permits to conduct that business as may be necessary for the maintenance of public order, the promotion of public morals, and the orderly conduct of such places, is not invalid; the city's right to prohibit lines of business being not restricted to nuisances per se, but extending to anything tending to injure the public morals, welfare, or safety.

2. Same — Validity of Ordinance — Discretion of Board.

An ordinance, empowering the police commissioners to make such regulations for granting permits to run pool halls as may be necessary for the maintenance of public order, the promotion of public morals, and the orderly conduct of such places, is not invalid as vesting an unrestricted discretion in the board.

3. Same—Conclusiveness of Board's Decision.

Where discretion is validly vested in a municipal board, a court will not interfere with its exercise, but, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary, will assume the duties are properly and lawfully performed.

4. Abatement and Revival—Pendency of Another Action—Mandamus.

The pendency of a mandamus proceeding in the superior court to compel police commissioners to issue an occupation permit was, under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430–433, a bar to a proceeding in the Court of Appeal between the same parties for the same cause.

5. Courts—Appellate Courts—Original Jurisdiction—Mandamus—Grounds.

Where the superior court denies mandamus against a board of police commissioners to compel the issuance of an occupation permit, and the petitioner appeals, the mere possibility of a change in the personnel of a board before the appeal can be heard will not justify the Court of Appeal in allowing a mandamus as an act of original jurisdiction.

ALLEN, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondents, the board of police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, to issue a permit authorizing the city clerk to issue to petitioner a license, upon payment of the legal fee therefor, to carry on and conduct a pool room and pool tables at a certain street number in said city.

It appears from the conceded facts set out in the petition and return that an ordinance is in force in said city making it unlawful to carry on certain kinds of business in said city without first procuring a license so to do, and among the kinds of business so specified is that of conducting pool rooms and operating pool tables. It is further ordained that no license to carry on certain kinds of business, among which is that of conducting a pool room or operating a pool table, shall issue, except a permit therefor be first had from the board of police commissioners; and that said board can only issue such permits upon petition of the party intending to operate the same, accompanied by consent of a majority of the property owners within the block where the permit is sought. It is further provided, by section 3 of said ordinance, that said board is empowered to make such rules and regulations for the granting of permits as may be proper or necessary for the maintenance of public order, the promotion of public morals and the orderly conduct of such places, or of the better enforcement of the provisions of the ordinance.

Petitioner's application for a license was denied by the board for the reason that the place mentioned in said application is located in a part of the city inhabited by a class of people which would render a pool room, if established there, a place of resort for dissolute and objectionable persons, and in the judgment of the board the issuance of such permit would injuriously affect public health, peace, and morals. Petitioner does not question the legality of the ordinance or ordinances in any regard, save as to the provisions of section 3 thereof, and as to which he contends that the power of regulation therein contained gives the right to prohibit certain kinds of business which he claims cannot be exercised except in relation to nuisances per se. "The power to regulate or prohibit, * * * not only includes nuisances, but extends to everything 'expedient for the preservation of the public health and the prevention of contagious diseases'" (Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 284), and, to which may be added, that it extends to everything expedient for the promotion of public morals, welfare, or safety. It is only when a business is lawful and has no injurious tendency that the governing body cannot say who shall and who shall not exercise the right itself. County of Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cemetery Association, 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75. The business of conducting a pool table cannot be said to be a useful employment or business. Nor can it be said that as ordinarily, if not invariably conducted, such business might not within the limits of reasonable probability be attended with uses injurious to public peace and morals. Whatever of danger or menace to such public interests is threatened by the establishment and conduct of such business is a question of fact which the ordinance authorizes the board of police commissioners to determine. Ex parte Shrader, supra. Such determination is conclusive. Ex parte Lacey, 108 Cal. 329, 41 Pac. 411, 38 L. R. A. 640, 49 Am. St. Rep. 93.

Petitioner further claims that the ordinance is invalid because it vests an undefined and unrestricted discretion in a board. This cannot well be said of an ordinance which contemplates an exercise of discretion only after determining certain facts upon which their judgment is based, for all regulations and rules of the board authorized by the ordinance are required to be directed to questions of public safety, health, and morals. The power to exercise the discretion reposed in the board by the ordinance is uniform as to all persons who may apply for a license to engage in that particular business, and it is the effect of that business in the locality which determines its tendency as affecting the subjects of police regulation. It needs no argument to establish the proposition that a public place of amusement, or any other place conducted as an inducement for the assemblage of a crowd of people, may be kept or maintained in certain localities under such circumstances as to render the same dangerous to the public safety. The safety of the people is the supreme law and justifies legislation pertaining to the public welfare, health, and morals. Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 766, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588. The city council of Los Angeles by its charter has full power to pass ordinances upon any subject of municipal control. The board of police commissioners have such power as is granted or imposed by ordinance. "In the government of the affairs of a great municipality, many powers must, necessarily, be confided to the discretion of its administrative officers, and it can be productive only of mischief, in the treatment of such questions, to substitute the discretion of strangers to the power, in place of that of the officers best acquainted with the necessities of the case, and to whom the Legislature has specially confided their exercise." People v. Grant, 126 N. Y. 476, 27 N. E. 967. The ordinance under consideration does not undertake to declare the keeping of a pool table a nuisance. It simply by fair inference declares that if in certain places, under certain circumstances, such pool room is conducted in a manner injurious to public morals or safety, it becomes a nuisance, and it leaves to the board of police commissioners discretion to determine whether the establishment of such place of amusement and assemblage in a certain district, with certain surroundings, is or is not a menace to public safety. If they determine that it is, then, and only then, can they refuse a permit, if other conditions are complied with. In addition to this, the other sections of the ordinance, which denounce the issuance of a license without permission therefor shall first be given by the board of police commissioners, contemplate an inquiry by the board as to the character of the permit; for it would be an idle thing to say that a board should issue a permit were they given no power to determine the circumstances and necessities of the case where the permit was claimed. The board of police commissioners, as its name implies, has in charge the police regulations of the city, and, in the absence of section 3 of the ordinance, they might well withhold a permit when in the exercise of reasonable discretion they are convinced that the issuance thereof would injure public health, morals, or safety. No question of unwarranted interference with private business is here presented, as was the case in all of the cases cited by petitioner; but here the only attempt appears to be to confine the business of pool rooms and places of that ilk to such restrictions and burdens as are necessary to prevent the infliction of public injury. Holding as we do the right of the city under the charter to enact the ordinance under consideration, a court will not interfere with the discretion reposed in a proper board or tribunal, but will assume that official duty has been properly and lawfully performed, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary.

In addition to what has heretofore been said, this writ should be denied upon another ground. The return and answer of respondents show, and its truth is admitted, that there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause. This constitutes a good defense, under sections 430 and 433 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by way of a plea in abatement. This court and the superior court have concurrent jurisdiction in proceedings in mandamus. The return and answer of respondents show that heretofore petitioner commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county, wherein the respondents to this proceeding were respondents; that the petition so filed in said court is identical in language with the petition in this case; that the answer therein filed by the respondents is the same in all respects other than as to the special plea in abatement; that the superior court proceeded to the trial of said action upon the merits and denied the writ, ordering findings and judgment for the defendants. The identity of the subject-matter of the two suits cannot be questioned. A judgment in the proceedings in the superior court, when final, could be pleaded in bar of this action as a prior adjudication (McCormick v. Gross, 135 Cal. 305, 67 Pac. 766), and, were it conceded that petitioner's application possessed merit, his legal remedy by way of an appeal from the judgment of the superior court, when the same is entered, is a sufficient answer to this petition and constitutes of itself sufficient grounds for the denial of the writ, and the mere possibility of a change in the personnel of the board of police commissioners before an appeal could be heard would afford no justification for the allowance of the writ by this court.

Ex parte VANDIVEER. (Cr. 36.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1906.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS — SCOPE OF INQUIRY — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In a habeas corpus proceeding to review the commitment of one on a preliminary examination, the court will only examine the evidence to ascertain whether the commitment is with reasonable or probable cause; whether the evidence is sufficient to convict beyond a reasonable doubt being for the jury to determine.

2. SAME—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

It is only when the testimony of the material witnesses for the people before a committing magistrate is clearly shown to be false that a prisoner should be discharged on habeas corpus; the office of the writ not warranting the court in passing upon the credibility of witnesses where there is conflict in the testimony, and the magistrate having the same right to judge of the credibility of witnesses as a jury would have at trial of the cause.

3. WITNESSES—CREDIBILITY—FALSUS IN UNO, FALSUS IN OMNIBUS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be discredited in others, did not require the rejection of the prosecutrix's direct testimony, in a prosecution for seduction given before the examining magistrate, because her testimony on cross-examination may have been rejected as being incredible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1080.]

4. SEDUCTION—CHASTITY OF FEMALE—EFFECT OF REPUTATION.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Seduction, § 73.]

5. HABEAS CORPUS—CHARGE OF SEDUCTION—COMMITMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a habeas corpus proceeding by one committed on a charge of seduction, evidence held sufficient as to the previous chastity of the prosecutrix, within Pen. Code, § 268, making such proof essential to conviction in such cases, to warrant the commitment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; J. J. Griffin, Judge.

F. G. Ostrander, for petitioner. E. H. Hoar, Dist. Atty., and Ben Berry, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Petitioner was charged with the crime of seduction under promise to marry, alleged to have occurred January 1, 1906. At the preliminary examination he was committed, and sues out the writ on the ground that the justice of the peace acted without reasonable or probable or any cause in committing him to the custody of the sheriff. No question arises on the regularity of the proceedings. We deem it best not to comment upon the evidence to any considerable extent, as the cause may be tried on substantially the same testimony as is now before us.

The prosecuting witness testified that petitioner had sexual intercourse with her at the date alleged, coupled with a promise on his part to marry her as a condition to her consent to such intercourse. Upon cross-examination she was interrogated as to the manner in which petitioner performed the act of intercourse. Her reply apparently placed the parties in such juxtaposition as to make the act physically impossible, if she clearly understood the question, and if we may infer that she meant her answer to be taken literally. It is strongly urged that, as petitioner was held to answer upon the testimony alone of the prosecuting witness, he should be discharged on this showing; that her testimony on cross-examination as to the manner of the accomplishment of the act of intercourse was so incredible as to compel the rejection of her direct testimony to the act. And the code rule is invoked "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3. Although upon first impression our Supreme Court held that it could not go behind the warrant of commitment and inquire into the question of reasonable or probable cause, on further consideration it was held that the court not only had the right, but that it was its duty, to so inquire. Ex parte Sternes, 82 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 38. And this has been the practice ever since that decision. Among other cases, see In re Howell, 114 Cal. 250, 46 Pac. 159. Petitioner, at the argument, placed much reliance upon the case of Lowery v. San Joaquin, C. & I. Co., 134 Cal. 185, 66 Pac. 225. That was a case of damages from the overflow of water alleged to have been caused by defendant's dam. The plaintiff had the verdict of the jury and judgment followed accordingly. On a review of the evidence the court reversed the judgment. The court said: "There is no direct evidence that defendant's dam caused the overflow. It rests upon inference from known laws of physics, and from actual physical conditions shown to exist at the time the levee gave way. * * * All reasonable inferences may be indulged from proved facts, but no inference may be upheld which is contrary to reason, to physical laws, or the course of nature." This case is not controlling of the case here, for there was direct evidence of intercourse, and the question is not alone whether the act could possibly have been performed in the manner described, but it is whether the magistrate had the right to accept part of the prosecuting witness' testimony and disregard a part. It is only necessary to examine the evidence to ascertain whether the commitment is without reasonable or probable cause. Whether the evidence is sufficient to convict beyond a reasonable doubt is the province of the jury to say, and ought not to be determined in advance on habeas corpus. Ex parte Becker, 86 Cal. 402, 25 Pac. 9. It is only when the testimony of the material witnesses for the people, taken before a committing magistrate, is clearly shown to be false, that a prisoner should be discharged on habeas corpus. So held when the court was called upon to determine the credibility to be accorded to the testimony of witnesses whose material statements conflicted. People v. Boyle, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 232. The office of the writ does not go to the extent of warranting this court in passing upon the credibility of witnesses where there is conflict in the testimony. The utmost power given us is to say whether or not there is some evidence which would reasonably justify the magistrate in finding that probable cause appeared that the offense was committed by the person charged. We are not permitted to speculate as to how a jury may regard the evidence. The committing magistrate has the same right to judge of the credibility of witnesses and of the truth or falsity of their testimony as a jury would have at the trial of the cause, but he is not bound by the rule of reasonable doubt. The code rule of evidence invoked by petitioner does not require that the entire testimony of witness is to be distrusted, much less disbelieved, because he has testified falsely upon some material fact. People v. Hicks, 53 Cal. 354. In this case it was said: "The effect of this provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3) is that if a witness is willfully false in one portion of his testimony, 'he is to be distrusted in others,' and not that his whole testimony is to be absolutely rejected." Without suggesting possible circumstances, which may have appeared at the hearing before the justice of the peace, leading him to believe the direct testimony of the prosecuting witness, it is enough for us to know that the testimony was given, and that, presumably, it was believed, although the testimony on cross-examination may have been rejected.

It is further insisted that there is not sufficient evidence of previous chaste character. Section 268 of the Penal Code, under which the petitioner was committed, provides: "Every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character is punishable," etc. It was said, in People v. Krusick, 93 Cal. 74, 28 Pac. 794: "It is as essential for the prosecution to show that the person against whom the offense was committed is of the character named in the statute, as it is to show that the sexual intercourse was had under promise of marriage." The father of the prosecuting witness testified that his daughter had lived with him during her whole life. "Q. Do you know what her reputation is as to being chaste and virtuous; that is, about and prior to January 1, 1906? The witness: Yes, sir. Q. What is her reputation as to being chaste and virtuous? A. Good." Cross-Examination: "Q. Who have you ever heard discuss it, Mr. Christian? A. Well, I never seen anything wrong with her. Q. You never heard anybody discuss that? A. No, sir; I never heard anything or seen anything. Q. That is what you mean by your answer—it is simply that you yourself never observed anything to indicate that she was not chaste? A. In my own judgment; yes, sir. Q. That is your judgment in the matter? A. Yes, sir." The statute uses the language "previous chaste character," and the question is suggested that proof of reputation is not necessarily proof of character. It is true that reputation is not character itself, but it may be evidence of character. Mr. Anderson, in his Law Dictionary, gives this definition of the term character: "The qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from other persons. These constitute his real character, while the qualities he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character or reputation." We do not think that the statute requires proof of the true character of the person, for that would in most cases be impossible. The best we can do is to judge the character of our neighbors by the estimation in which they are held in the community. Good general reputation for honesty, chastity, veracity, and like qualities is synonymous with good character as to these qualities, within the meaning of the statute. It must be admitted that the evidence of the previous chaste character of the prosecuting witness is not entirely satisfactory, especially in view of some testimony given by her when asked if she had not previously to January 1, 1906, had sexual intercourse with petitioner. We cannot say, however, that there is no evidence upon this issue, or that it is entirely insufficient to justify the magistrate in submitting it to the determination of a jury.

The writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by C. E. Tabler against Will Peverill, individually, and as administrator of Christopher Peverill, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

M. B. Harris and Bernhard & Sutherland, for appellant. Smith & Ostrander, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title to certain land in Fresno county.

The cause was tried by the court without a jury and defendant Will Peverill had judgment that he is the owner in fee of the land subject to the administration of the estate of Christopher Peverill, deceased. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. Prior to the filing of the complaint (which was August 23, 1903), defendant Martha J., widow of said deceased, on April 28, 1903, conveyed all her interest in the land to defendant Will Peverill, as did also defendants Mary M. and George A., children of deceased, on April 29, 1903. The default of Martha J. was duly entered, and Mary M. and George A. disclaimed having any interest in the property. Defendant Will Peverill alone answered to the complaint.

The complaint is in the form usual in actions to quiet title. The answer and cross-complaint of defendant Will Peverill denies plaintiff's title and alleges title in himself subject to administration of the estate of Peverill, deceased. In his cross-complaint asking that his title be quieted as against plaintiff, defendant alleges that on April 16, 1892, one Charles H. Robinson was the owner in fee of the property, and that on that day he and his wife, Leonora L., conveyed the same to Christopher Peverill, who thereupon became and remained the owner thereof until May 20, 1900, on which day he died intestate, leaving said property to his heirs at law, the said defendants. Plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint denies the alleged title of Christopher Peverill and sets up title in plaintiff, claiming that said Robinson agreed to sell said property to Christopher Peverill, on March 15, 1888; that on November 20, 1890, said Peverill conveyed his interest to one Coulthard, who, on March 31, 1892, conveyed said property to Clara S. Peverill, through whom by mesne conveyances the property was conveyed to plaintiff; that from March 31, 1892, said Clara Peverill and her grantees, and successors in interest and plaintiff herein, "have been openly, notoriously, continuously, uninterruptedly, peaceably and adversely to defendant Will Peverill, and to his grantors and predecessors in interest and to all the world, in the possession of and seized of said premises under a claim of right and title therein and thereto, and as the owner in fee." Sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure are pleaded in bar of the cross-complaint. The statute of limitations, however, is not urged in the brief of plaintiff and will not be further noticed.

The court found, and the findings are not challenged, that Robinson conveyed the property as alleged by defendant; that Christopher Peverill died intestate May 30, 1900, leaving as heirs at law the persons above named as such; that Martha, Mary Minerva and George Peverill conveyed to defendant as alleged. Plaintiff assigned as error the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings following: That defendant Will Peverill is the owner of the land subject to administration of said estate; that plaintiff has not, nor have his grantors, been openly, notoriously, etc., in adverse possession of said premises, and that plaintiff is not the owner thereof. It was stipulated that Charles H. Robinson is the common source of title of plaintiff and defendant.

An abstract of title was agreed upon as including all records relating to the title except a deed from J. F. Cowdery to plaintiff. This abstract shows the following: (1) Bond for deed from Robinson to Christopher Peverill, dated March 15, 1888. (2) Quitclaim deed from Christopher Peverill to C. Coulthard, dated November 20, 1890. (3) Quitclaim deed from Coulthard, to Clara S. Peverill (divorced wife of Christopher and mother of Mary Minerva and George), dated March 31, 1892. (4) Robinson and wife to Christopher Peverill, by grant, bargain, and sale deed, dated April 16, 1892. (5) Grant, bargain, and sale deed from Clara S. Peverill to California Savings & Loan Society, dated May 13, 1899. (6) Grant, bargain, and sale deed of California Savings & Loan Society to J. F. Cowdery, dated May 14, 1903. (7) Cowdery, by grant, bargain, and sale deed to plaintiff, dated June 15, 1903. There was introduced by plaintiff, as bearing upon the issues, the judgment roll filed in the clerk's office of San Benito county, in the action entitled "Clara S. Peverill v. Christopher Peverill," for divorce. The judgment showed that the verified complaint was filed February 7, 1896, in San Benito county, in which plaintiff averred that she had for four months last past been a resident of said county; that defendant had deserted her "from the 2d day of February, 1895; that the issue of the said marriage are: Mary M. Peverill, aged 16 years; William C. Peverill, aged 15 years; George A. Peverill, aged 14 years;" that a decree was granted plaintiff in the action as prayed for on the ground of desertion; which the decree adjudged took place February 2, 1895, and the custody of the children given her; the decree was granted March 25, 1896. No reference was made to any property in the complaint.

In his answer and cross-complaint the defendant in the divorce action set forth certain personal property, and also the land in question, claiming that all of the property was community property. The answer to the cross-complaint denied that "the real estate set forth and described in defendant's cross-complaint is now the community property of said plaintiff and defendant, but alleges the fact to be that the said real estate and the whole thereof is, and for many months past has been, the separate property of said plaintiff herein, and that said defendant has no interest, ownership or title thereto." The decree adjudged "that the plaintiff be and she is hereby awarded the community property of said parties consisting of household and kitchen furniture and farming tools and implements," being all the personal property mentioned in the cross-complaint except one horse, one mule, one set double harness, one cart and some poultry. Of this latter and the real estate, no disposition was made in the decree. It does not appear when Christopher married Martha, after his divorce, but it does appear that she is his surviving widow. It appears that the Savings & Loan Society loaned $500 to Christopher on May 10, 1892, and he and his then wife, Clara, executed their mortgage of the premises to secure payment of the loan. This mortgage rested upon the property up to 1899, and, as shown above, Clara Peverill, on May 13, 1899, conveyed the property to the Savings & Loan Society, and by an agreement dated May 31, 1899, the loan society entered into a contract to sell her the land for the sum of $800, to be paid in installments—the last one falling due May 10, 1903—she to pay all taxes on the land, "and to cultivate and care for said premises, first party (the society) agreeing, on payment and performance of the other covenants" to give second "party a deed." It appeared that Clara Peverill paid three annual installments, 1900, 1901, 1902, of $50 each, and, as we have seen, in May, 1903, deeded the property to the Savings & Loan Society probably because she could make no more payments. The record title clearly runs from Robinson to Christopher Peverill, and was held by him as community property at the time the decree of divorce was entered, having been acquired during his marriage with Clara. Civ. Code, § 164. The record does not disclose the terms of Robinson's bond for a deed.

One of the issues in the divorce case was as to how Peverill held the property, he claiming it as community, and she claiming it as her separate property, presumably by virtue of the quitclaim deed of Christopher to Coulthard and the latter's quitclaim deed to her. But Robinson conveyed to Christopher subsequently and Christopher's after-acquired title vested valid title in him, thus rendering his previous quitclaim to Coulthard ineffectual. 1 Devlin on Deeds, § 27; McDonald v. Edmonds, 44 Cal. 328, and cases there cited. The decree of divorce failed to dispose of the real estate in question then owned by Christopher. Being community property, he and his divorced wife Clara, as to this land, became tenants in common. DeGodey v. DeGodey, 39 Cal. 157; Biggi v. Biggi, 98 Cal. 35, 32 Pac. 803, 35 Am. St. Rep. 141. Respondent contends that the question of plaintiff's right to a one-half interest in the property as the successor of Clara Peverill was not raised by the pleadings; that because plaintiff claimed throughout the trial that Clara was the owner of the entire property, "plaintiff will not now be permitted to change his theory of the case by the claim that the property was community property." The pleadings put the title in issue. Plaintiff had the right to claim the entire title and show whatever interest he had in the property. Respondent was not misled to his injury by any position taken by appellant, for it is partly through the evidence submitted by respondent at the trial that the true situation of the title was disclosed. There was considerable evidence introduced to show adverse title in Clara. We think, however, that it was wholly insufficient. Clearly she failed to show, if it were possible to so show, that prior to the decree of divorce she had possession adversely to her husband. By the decree she became a tenant in common with him and that relation continued to the day of his death.

It was said in Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535, 78 Pac. 261, cited approvingly in Faubel v. McFarland, 144 Cal. 717: "It is clear that an adverse holding and claim of title do not, of themselves, constitute an ouster. The tenant out of possession, has a right to assume that possession of his co-tenant is his possession, until informed to the contrary, either by express notice or by acts and declarations which may possibly be equivalent to notice under certain circumstances. But until he has notice, either actual or constructive, in some form, that the possession of his co-tenant has become hostile, it will be deemed in law to have been amicable, notwithstanding the tenant in possession may in fact, have been holding adversely." In Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 592, 49 Am. Rep. 100, the court said: "Hence there must be some conduct of the occupying tenant evidenced by acts or declarations, or both, in its nature and essence hostile to the title of the tenant out of possession, and imparting knowledge of such hostility to the latter, to affect his right." See, also, Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170–180, 27 Pac. 658. See, also, subject discussed by Mr. Wood in his work on Limitations (section 266), where it is said that "the evidence must be much stronger than would be required to establish a title by possession in a stranger."

The decree of divorce was entered March 25, 1896. Mrs. Peverill testified as to her residence: "I went to the Purington ranch in the early part of 1901. I did not live continuously on the place from the time I separated from my husband until I went to the Purington ranch. I was away at different periods, and one time changed my residence absolutely to San Benito county for all of a year," where she resided with her father. This was while she was procuring her divorce. The statute, in our opinion, did not begin to run, if at all, prior to March 25, 1896. Mrs. Peverill was awarded the custody of the children (all minors), and she testified, that, after obtaining her divorce (at what date she did not say), she "went back to the place involved in this suit" and lived there with her children. The ranch was her home. She was away frequently employed elsewhere as a nurse, sometimes for two or three months, but the children remained there and "the boys farmed the ranch." Her son "Will was (1896) 14 or 15 years old;" George was a year younger than Will, and Mary was a year older than Will. Christopher died May 30, 1900, and whatever interest he then had in the property vested immediately in his heirs at law. Assuming that the statute was running against Christopher Peverill from March 25, 1896, it had run but 4 years and 2 months when he died. Unless, therefore, the evidence will warrant us in holding that at his death the statute continued to run against these children, plaintiff has failed to establish his contention. These children, as we have seen, became tenants in common with their mother. The evidence is that they "worked [the place] and applied the proceeds of their work upon the interest of this debt [the mortgage debt]." Mrs. Peverill testified: "I did not at any time while occupying the place, after the separation from my husband, make any statement to my children to the effect that I was the sole owner of the place, and that my children had no interest in it. I had no occasion to say anything about it at all. I have no recollection that any of them ever inquired of me as to the title of the land. The children had marketed the crops and received the proceeds and expended the same for the use of the family. I have left the matter entirely to them at times." These children continued to sustain this relation, looking after the property, jointly with their mother and solely when she was absent, as happened often, until February, 1901, when witness Humphrey, as he testified, leased the place for that year and Mrs. Peverill went to the Purington place to live. There is not the slightest evidence tending to show that she held the place or claimed it adversely to her children, in the sense of the statute, from the death of her late husband (May 30, 1900) to the leasing of it to Humphrey (February, 1901). Whatever view may be taken of the evidence up to this time, the continuity of her alleged adverse possession was broken from May to the following February. Conceding that it was renewed by this act of ownership in leasing the property, which we are far from holding as sufficient, against her tenants in common, the statute had not run the requisite time when the action was commenced. The findings of the court, however, that plaintiff had no interest in the property and that defendant was the owner thereof, subject only to administration, are not supported by the evidence.

On Petition for Rehearing.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It is now claimed, as we understand the petition, that by the decree of divorce introduced by plaintiff, the property rights of the parties to the divorce action were fully and finally determined. It appeared from the complaint that plaintiff, Mrs. Peverill, said nothing about any property. In his answer and cross-complaint defendant Peverill referred to certain personal property, and also to the real property now in controversy; all of which he averred was the community property of the parties.

In her answer to the cross-complaint, plaintiff does not mention the personal property, but denies that the real property is community property, and avers that it is her separate property. The decree, as pointed out in the opinion, purported to dispose only of certain specified articles of community and personal property. It seems clear to us that the decree left the real estate undisposed of. In the present action, we are not seeking to set aside or disturb that decree, but only to give it effect so far as we may do so. If it be true, as we think it is, that the real property remained undisposed of by that decree, the parties remained tenants in common of the real property as was pointed out. Looking, then, to the conveyances, we find that Christopher Peverill conveyed by quitclaim to Coulthard November 20, 1890. But as Peverill then had no title, he conveyed nothing. On April 16, 1892, Robinson, the source of title, conveyed by grant, bargain and sale to Peverill, who died without conveying to any one, and his interest vested at his death in his heirs at law. The opinion shows how it came about that his former wife, Clara, had an interest in the property as tenant in common, and that her grantee succeeded to that interest.

We are unable to discover any error in the decision heretofore rendered, and the petition for a rehearing is therefore denied.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

SHIPMAN et al. v. UNANGST, Judge.
(S. F. 4,654.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 4, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW—NEW TRIAL.

A motion for a new trial is not a proper procedure after the court in probate proceedings sets apart a homestead to the widow, with certain property as exempt from execution, and awards her a family allowance, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1465, 1466; it being the duty of the court ex parte and without petition to make such orders.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—TIME OF PRESENTATION.

A writ of mandate to a court to settle a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from an order of the court will not issue where the proposed bill is not presented in time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Exceptions, Bill of, § 82.]

In Bank. Application by Eliza Shipman and others for a writ of mandate against E. P. Unangst, judge of the superior court for the county of San Luis Obispo. Application denied.

S. V. Wright, for petitioners. William Shipsey, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. In the course of the probate proceedings in the matter of the estate of Patrick Moore, deceased, the court made its order setting apart a homestead to the widow, with certain property as exempt from execution, and also awarded her a family allowance, all in accordance with sections 1465 and 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Subsequently petitioners herein gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, and moved therefor, presenting for settlement a bill of exceptions to be used on said motion. The court refused to settle the bill and petitioners applied for mandate.

In Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 29 Pac. 235, this identical question came before the court, and it was there decided that a motion for a new trial was not a proper procedure after a family allowance had been granted; that it is the duty of the court ex parte and without petition to make such orders. What is there said is decisive of the question under this application.

It is, however, urged by petitioners that the bill should be settled as a bill of exceptions to be used upon their appeal from the order. If the circumstances permitted, this court would so hold, as was done in Leach v. Pierce, supra. But, treating the proposed bill of exceptions in this case as a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from the order, its presentation was entirely too late.

The application for mandate is therefore denied.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1907.)

PARTITION—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO PARTITION—OYSTER BEDS.

Act March 30, 1874, St. 1873–74, p. 940, c. 671, § 1, provides that any citizen may lay down and plant oysters in any of the public waters of the state, and that the ownership of and the exclusive right to take up the same shall remain in such person, etc. Following sections provide that the person desiring to use the right must define the limits of his claim by stakes, etc., maintain thereon a sign with the words, "Oyster Beds," and record a description of such beds, etc., and makes the carrying off of oysters or the removal of boundary marks by strangers a misdemeanor. Section 9 provides that the act shall not apply to any tide lands which the state may have sold to private parties, and that nothing herein shall be so construed as to interfere with the right of the state to sell any of the tide lands, nor affect the rights of purchasers at any sale of tide lands by the state. Held, that the privilege given by the act is a mere personal license, and not an estate of inheritance, subject to partition under Code Civ. Proc. § 752, providing for the partition of real property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 38, Partition, §§ 39–50; vol. 23, Fish, §§ 10–15.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

F. J. Russell, for appellant. Campbell, Metson & Campbell, Charles Tupper King, and J. R. Moulthrop, for respondent. Reed, Nusbaumer & Black, amici curiæ.

McFARLAND, J. Plaintiff, a corporation, brings this action for a partition of certain premises which it avers to be "real property," and avers that it has an "estate of inheritance" therein. A demurrer to the complaint was filed by some of the defendants. The demurrer was general and special, and was sustained in the court below, and judgment was rendered in favor of defendants. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The action is based on section 752, Code Civ. Proc. That section is under the head of "Actions for Partition of Real Property," and it provides that an action for partition may be brought by one or more co-tenants of real property, in which one or more of them "have an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years." The court below held that the complaint shows that neither plaintiff nor any of the defendants had an estate of inheritance, or for life, or for years, in any real property, and upon that ground sustained the demurrer; and, as we think that this conclusion was right, we need not examine any other question raised in the case.

In the complaint the alleged real property in which plaintiff is averred to have an estate of inheritance is described as follows: "The right to the exclusive use and occupation thereof for the purposes of laying down and planting oysters and taking up and carrying off the same in and from said real property, in accordance with and as provided by the terms of an act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled 'An act to encourage the planting and cultivation of oysters,' approved March 30, 1874." Those parts of said act of March 30, 1874 (St. 1873–74, p. 940, c. 671), which are material here, are as follows: The title of the act is: "An act to encourage the planting and cultivation of oysters." And the first section is as follows: "Any citizen of the United States may lay down and plant oysters in any of the bays, rivers or public waters of this State; and the ownership of and the exclusive right to take up and carry off the same shall be continued and remain in such person or persons who shall have laid down and planted the same." The next sections, down to and including section 8, provide that the person desiring to use the right must define the limits of his claim by stakes, etc., must maintain thereon a sign on which must be painted the words, "Oyster Beds," and must record a description of his bed or beds of oysters in the county recorder's office. In the case at bar it does not appear that appellant complied with these provisions, but we will not consider that matter. It is further provided that, after he has complied with these provisions, any person who enters thereon and carries off oysters or removes therefrom marks designating boundaries shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 9 is as follows: "This act shall not apply to any tide lands which the state may have sold to private parties; provided, further, that nothing herein shall be so construed as to interfere with the right of the state to sell and dispose of any of the tide lands, nor to affect in any manner the rights of purchasers at any sale of tide lands by the state."

In the property described in the complaint there is no element of an estate of inheritance, or, as described in section 761, Civ. Code, a "perpetual" estate. The privilege extended to all citizens by said act to temporarily use the unsold tide lands belonging to the state, if it can be considered as an estate at all in lands, is certainly of no higher dignity than an estate at will. But, in our opinion, it is really nothing more than a mere personal license. That was the view taken of similar statutes by the highest court of Maryland, where the oyster business is a very large one. In Phipps v. State, 22 Md. 380, 85 Am. Dec. 654, the court was dealing with statutes like ours, and it said: "It abundantly appears from the nature of the privilege in dispute, as well as from the terms in which it was conferred, that no transfer of the state's title to lands covered by navigable water was contemplated. Permission to use given areas covered by navigable water for a particular purpose seems to be all that the Legislature intended, and we think the language of its assent to that use should be construed, not as a grant binding the state, but as a conditional license, revocable at the pleasure of the Legislature." Again, in Hess v. Muir, 6 Atl. 673, 65 Md. 586, Alvey, C. J., said: "These statutes, the better to promote the growth and to increase the supply of oysters in the waters of the state, provide that any of the citizens of the state may locate one lot, and only one, of five acres, in any unappropriated ground covered by the tide, and plant the same with oysters, and thereupon he is given exclusive control thereof. This, however, is not a grant of an indefeasible right or estate in the lot thus authorized to be located and planted with oysters. It is simply a conditional or qualified license or franchise, revocable at the will and pleasure of the state. Phipps v. State, 22 Md. 380, 85 Am. Dec. 654. It is neither inheritable nor transferable, but is purely a personal privilege in the party locating the lot."

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GOYTINO v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

(L. A. 1,616.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1907.)

1. Adverse Possession—Evidence.

Evidence in an action involving the question of adverse possession held sufficient to sustain a finding that there was no such possession for time enough to give title.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Dunnigan & Dunnigan, for appellant. W. B. Mathews, City Atty., and Lester R. Hewitt, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to quiet her title to certain lots of land in the city of Los Angeles. Judgment went for plaintiff as to all the land except that part last described in the complaint, which the city of Los Angeles alleges to be a public street called "Leonis street."

As to the last-named land, the court found that plaintiff had no title thereto, and that it was a public street, and rendered judgment as to said land in favor of the city. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the court denied the motion; and from the order denying the motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals. There is no appeal from the judgment.

The appellant founds her claim of title solely upon prescription, claiming to have fenced in the said land and to have held it by actual adverse possession under claim of ownership for more than five years.

The main features of the case are these: The said piece of land called "Leonis street" was formerly part of a larger tract, called "Leonis tract," which was owned by several persons as tenants in common, including appellant. In 1892 there was pending an action entitled "Brousseau v. Leonis" for the partition of the said Leonis tract; and in March, 1892, a decree was rendered in said action by which partition was ordered, and a part of the tract was awarded to each co-tenant. Appellant was awarded a part of the land designated as "lot 20," which adjoins and faces on said Leonis street. The referees who had been appointed in the case had made their report, which was accompanied by a map on which was delineated the lots which were to go to the co-tenants, respectively, and also certain streets, among which was the said Leonis street. This decree and map were accepted by all the co-tenants, and the map was duly recorded. Afterwards, in 1901, the mayor and council of the city of Los Angeles passed an ordinance by which all offers of dedication of streets were formally accepted.

Appellant, however, contends that prior to the passage of said ordinance she had acquired title to this asserted street by prescription. But the court found that she had no title to said land; and the evidence as to the question whether or not she had acquired any title by prescription was certainly conflicting. The only evidence on the point offered by appellant was the testimony of her husband, J. P. Goytino. He testified that he was appellant's agent in the management of her business and real property; and that after the decree, and early in 1892, he inclosed lot 20 and also said land designated on the map as "Leonis street" by fences, and that since then the appellant had kept the said land inclosed by fences, claiming to own it. But Horace Bell, a witness for respondent, testified that he was one of the tenants in common of the Leonis tract, and had awarded to him lots 23 and 25, which face on Leonis street directly opposite to said lot 20 of appellant; that three or four years after the date of the decree he went upon the land, and, finding some Chinamen intruding on his lots, he fenced them in; that appellant had a fence along her lot 20, and that after he had fenced in his lots there was a fence on each side of Leonis street, but no fences on the end of said street, and that "this left Leonis street open"; that several years afterwards he heard that Goytino had closed in the street, and, going there, he found that Goytino had taken some lumber left there by the witness and had built two fences across Leonis street; and that he immediately complained to the street superintendent, who afterwards removed the fences and opened the street. While the dates of some of these later occurrences are not given with entire exactness, still Bell's testimony squarely contradicted the testimony of Goytino, to the effect that he had fenced in the street in 1892, and showed that there had been no such fencing for three or four years after 1892; and, considering all the evidence, we cannot say that the court was not justified in its finding. Goytino also testified that he planted some trees in the street, but the testimony of Bell was that these trees ran parallel with the south line of lot 20 owned by appellant, and were "about where the curb line of a sidewalk would run."

The findings are general, responding to the averments of the complaint, which were general. There is no point made as to any want of findings; the position taken by appellant being that the findings were not warranted by the evidence.

RIXFORD v. ZEIGLER et al. (S. F. 3,607.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1907.)

DEEDS—ESSENTIALS OF CONVEYANCE—PARTIES—CAPACITY TO TAKE.

A deed to a Roman Catholic church community, which was not a corporation either de jure or de facto, and in which instrument no individual was named as a grantee, and in which there was no statement as to who constituted the church community, and under which neither the community, nor any of its members, nor any person claiming to act for it, ever took possession or used the property, passed no title from the grantor.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. E. H. Rixford and J. A. Fairweather, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by the original plaintiff, F. G. Halsey, for the partition of a certain piece of land. It was averred in the complaint that Halsey and defendant Zeigler were the owners in fee of the land as tenants in common, and the other defendants were made parties as claiming some interest in the property. Zeigler answered, admitting and averring that plaintiff and himself were owners of the land in contest as tenants in common, and united in plaintiff's prayer for partition. Defendant Perine answered, denying that plaintiff and Zeigler were the owners of the land, and averring that he (Perine) was the sole owner thereof. The other defendants made default. The court found that plaintiff and defendant Zeigler were the owners of the property, that Perine had no interest therein, and rendered an interlocutory judgment for a partition as prayed for in the complaint. From this judgment, defendant Perine appeals.

The material facts are these: On July 8, 1864, one B. C. Vandall recovered judgment in the district court in and for the city and county of San Francisco against Harvey S. Brown for $1,759.26, with interest and costs. On July 23, 1864, an execution was issued under said judgment and was levied upon the land in contest in the case at bar as the property of said Brown, and by virtue of said execution the property was sold by the sheriff to said Vandall, and on June 7, 1865, the sheriff executed a deed to Vandall, conveying to the latter all the title which Brown had in the land at the date of said judgment. Afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, whatever title Brown had in the land at the time of the execution sale, etc., vested by mesne conveyances in the plaintiff, Halsey, and the defendant Zeigler. Brown was admittedly the owner of the land at the time of the suit by Vandall, the execution sale, etc., unless before that, on the 22d day of December, 1862, he parted with the title by an instrument in writing which he that day executed. This instrument purported to be a deed conveying the land in contest here to "the community styling itself the German Roman Catholic St. Bonifazieus Church Community." This instrument contains the following provision: "This conveyance is upon express condition that said property is to be used by said community for school and church purposes, and for no other purpose whatever, nor shall said community sell or transfer the same or any part thereof, but the same shall be and remain the property of said community as long as they shall make use of said property for above purposes; but if they sell or transfer the same, or use it for any other purposes than those above mentioned, they shall forfeit all rights under this conveyance, and the said property shall revert to the first party and his heirs." It is found by the court upon sufficient evidence that at the time of the execution of said instrument the said church community was and still is an unincorporated association of persons associated together for the purpose of religious worship. It was not a corporation either de jure or de facto. It never pretended to act as a corporation. In the instrument no individual person was named as a grantee, nor was there any statement as to who constituted said church community. Neither the said community, nor any of its members, nor any person claiming to act for it, ever took possession or used the said property for school or church purposes, or for any other purpose whatever, and never undertook to make any use whatever of the properties named in said instrument. In the case at bar all persons who are members of said community were made defendants, and they all made default.

Under these facts we are of opinion that no title ever passed out of Brown to any persons whatever by said instrument. The general rule is, beyond doubt, that a deed of conveyance is void unless the grantee named is capable of taking and holding the property named in the deed; and the general rule also is that to make a deed effective the grantee must be a person, either natural or artificial, capable of taking and holding the property. In Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 230, a deed had been made to the "Hibernia Company," and it was held void; the court saying: "The company does not appear to be a corporation, nor even a partnership, holding the claims as partnership property, but simply a voluntary association, not formed by articles in writing and without legal existence—a body unknown to the law. As such the company would be incapable of taking and holding mining claims, by grant or by any other means by which title to real estate would pass." In Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 408, 89 Am. Dec. 57, the court approves a decision in the case of Arthur v. Weston and Strode, 22 Mo. 378. In that case it appeared that lands had been conveyed to "W. W. Phelps & Co." At the trial Arthur offered to prove that, when the conveyance was made to Phelps & Co., said firm was composed of Phelps, Cowdry, and Whitmore; but the court rejected the offered evidence, holding the law to be that "the deed to W. W. Phelps & Co. operated to vest the legal title in W. W. Phelps alone, and that the entire title passed by the sheriff's deed under the execution sale, and gave judgment accordingly." Upon writ of error the Supreme Court sustained the decision of the court below, holding that the deed to W. W. Phelps & Co. did not take effect as a legal conveyance of the premises to Phelps, Cowdry, and Whitmore jointly, but that it operated to convey the property to Phelps alone. The court observed that the question "is not merely whether the grantor intended to convey to the persons composing the firm, but whether the partnership style is, as a matter of law, a good name of purchase in a conveyance of real property sufficient to pass the legal title to all the individuals of the firm. * * * A conveyance of real property being required by the statute to be put in writing, the party who is to take as grantee must be sufficiently ascertained by the written instrument, or it is a nullity, so far as it purports to effect a transfer of the legal title." See, also, Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254; Phelan v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 531. In 13 Ency. of Law & Procedure, p. 624, it is said: "If the firm name is given, and it consists of the surnames of the several partners, it will vest the legal title in them; and, generally, if members of a partnership are designated with sufficient certainty under a firm name, they will take, but a general or an abbreviated term, such as 'Company,' 'Co.,' or 'Bro.,' is held to be insufficient." The foregoing is undoubtedly the general rule; and there is nothing in the case at bar which brings it within any of the exceptions to that rule. The cases cited by appellant are where property had been granted for charitable purposes, and had been taken possession of and continuously used for those purposes by persons claiming to be intended by a deed which merely uses the general name of the association, and in such cases courts of equity have devised plans for carrying out the intended charity; and they were cases where the persons claiming to be the beneficiaries under the deed were parties to the action asserting their rights. But nothing of the kind occurred in the case at bar. The persons who are members of the church community have never asserted any right under the deed, and from 1862, the date of the deed, to the present time, have never set up any claim under it. It is, therefore, our opinion that no title whatever passed from Brown to the said church community, that the title to the property was in Brown at the time of the sale under the Vandall judgment, and that such title was in the respondent at the time of the commencement of this action and when the judgment was rendered.

The appellant Perine claims title through a deed made by said Brown to one Spring, executed January 12, 1867. Whatever title Spring got from Brown went by mesne conveyances to one Gendotti, and afterwards Perine brought suit to foreclose a street assessment on the land in question, in which Gendotti was made defendant; and after a judgment in that case in favor of Perine the sheriff made a deed under the decree to Perine. In that case Perine also made the "church community" by that general name a party, but did not make any one of the members of that community a party. Of course, if, as appellant contends, Brown's deed to the church community carried the title, he had nothing left to convey to Spring, and, if Brown's deed did not convey the title to the church community, then his title passed under the Vandall judgment, which was prior to his deed to Spring. But it is sufficient to say that the judgment in the assessment case is of no value as against the respondents herein, who are the real owners of the property, and were not made parties to that suit.

The foregoing views make it unnecessary to notice other points made by respondents. The interlocutory judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(S. F. 3,665.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 7, 1907.)

1. WATERS—CONTRACT OF SALE—LIMITATION AS TO USE.

Defendant, owning the waters of a creek, sold to plaintiff the right to receive and use one-fifth thereof, with the right to convey them across defendant's land to plaintiff's land, with the covenant "that all the interest, rights, estate, and privileges hereinabove described as passing or accruing to or vesting in" plaintiff "shall be deemed and treated as appurtenant to and as a part and for the benefit of said lands of" plaintiff "hereinabove described, and that" defendant "is bound by the terms of this instrument to all subsequent owners of said land of" plaintiff, "as well as to" plaintiff, "but to no other person or persons." Held, that the agreement, while making the water rights appurtenant to plaintiff's land, did not limit the use of the waters thereto, so that he could sell, for limited periods, surplus water to which he was entitled and which had been carried to his lands.

2. DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that between January 16th and April 19th, on which latter day defendant stopped the flow of plaintiff's water, plaintiff had negotiated for sale of the water for 21 days at $20 per day, does not show damage to the extent of $420; it not appearing when the water was to be furnished, or whether any of it was furnished.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

W. P. Johnson and E. E. Cothran, for appellant. Joseph H. Patton, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This appeal involves the question as to what extent plaintiff is entitled to control certain waters conveyed to him by defendant.

The record discloses the following facts: In October, 1893, defendant was the owner of a tract of land containing 247.37 acres, known as the "Sorosis Farm," bordering on the easterly side of Quito creek in Santa Clara county, and in that month built a dam across said creek and a diverting ditch upon its own lands, and thereby effectually diverted to its lands, for the purposes of irrigating said Sorosis farm, and also for the purpose of irrigating other lands in said county of Santa Clara owned by parties other than defendant, all the waters of said creek flowing therein ordinarily during all seasons of the year.

After such appropriation and diversion, and on July 22, 1896, defendant conveyed to plaintiff 40.37 acres of such Sorosis farm, and also the right to take from the said ditch of defendant, at the headgate thereof in said Quito creek, so much of the water flowing therein to which defendant was entitled as should be represented by a fraction having for its numerator 40.37 and for its denominator 247.37 (about one-sixth of said diverted water), together with the right to convey said water across lands of the defendant lying between the diverting ditch (which was on said land of defendant) and the lands conveyed to plaintiff. Thereafter, and prior to January 16, 1902, the waters of said creek flowing in said ditch were applied to a beneficial use, namely, the irrigation of the respective lands of the plaintiff and defendant, on which there were growing and bearing orchards, and for the purpose of the irrigation of other orchard land, both riparian and nonriparian to said stream. Immediately prior to January 16, 1902, plaintiff and defendant, in concert, built in said irrigation ditch a receiving box, and two certain flumes of uniform depth but of different width; one box being six feet in width, the other 13½ inches, the larger one being known as defendant's flume, the smaller one as plaintiff's flume, and the waters from the latter flume being conducted into the lands of plaintiff by the ditch then existing across defendant's lands and mentioned in the deed of July 22, 1896. By the construction of the smaller flume plaintiff received in his ditch and conveyed to his land a somewhat larger quantity than he was entitled to under his deed—about one-fifth of the water instead of one-sixth. After the receiving box and flumes had been constructed, and on January 16, 1902, plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement which recited that plaintiff had a right to a certain portion of the waters that flowed in said main irrigation ditch, and a right of way to carry the same across defendant's lands to the lands of plaintiff, and that, for the purpose of dividing, apportioning, and setting apart to each other their respective quantity of the volume of water which each was entitled to receive, they had constructed and built in said irrigation ditch the receiving box and flumes above referred to. By the agreement the parties immediately conveyed to each other the right to receive and use all the waters that might flow in their respective flumes, with the additional right conferred on plaintiff to convey said waters across said defendant's land to his own through the then existing ditch which he had theretofore been using. The agreement further provided for a payment by both parties of a proportionate amount of the expenses of permanently maintaining the main irrigation ditch from the dam to the point of diversion of its waters between the parties, with other provisions relative to said main irrigation ditch unnecessary to state. The agreement then proceeded with the following covenant: "That all the interest, rights, estate, and privileges hereinabove described as passing or accruing to or vesting in the said party of the second part [plaintiff] shall be deemed and treated as, and appurtenant to and as a part and for the benefit of said lands of the party of the second part hereinabove described, and that the party of the first part [defendant] is bound by the terms of this instrument to all subsequent owners of said land of the party of the second part, as well as to the said party of the second part, but to no other person or persons."

From the execution of the agreement of January 16, 1902, to April 19, 1902, plaintiff received water from said smaller flume and conveyed it in the ditch across the land of defendant to his own lands. About the latter date, plaintiff, finding that the water so conveyed to his lands was more than sufficient to irrigate them, and that there was a surplus of waters taken and received in his flume and ditch which he did not require until a later period during the irrigation season, sold and contracted to sell, to his neighbors owning orchards below the land of plaintiff, the use of said surplus waters, for short periods of time, and till he would again need them for irrigation, and constructed ditches for that purpose. On said April 19, 1902, defendant, asserting that plaintiff could only use such waters on his own lands, and that when not so being used defendant was entitled to take and use them, dammed up plaintiff's flume and ditch and diverted from plaintiff all the waters which should have flowed to plaintiff's land therein, caused a portion thereof to be turned back into the Quito creek, and diverted the remainder thereof for the purpose of selling the same to other persons. Plaintiff thereupon commenced this action, praying, in effect, that it be adjudged that he had a right to sell and dispose of the surplus waters flowing or to flow from said main irrigating ditch through his flume and ditch upon his lands, and for special damages in the sum of $420, sustained through the act of defendant in obstructing and diverting the flow of water through his flume and ditch, and thereby preventing the sale by him thereof. The court decided that since July 22, 1896, plaintiff had been and still is the owner of the water rights, waters, and rights of way described in the deed of conveyance of that date, and on said January 16, 1902, was the owner of the waters, water rights, and rights of way granted and conveyed to him by defendant by the agreement of that date; that plaintiff is entitled to use and appropriate said waters when conducted to his lands in such manner and for such purposes as he may deem proper, both in the irrigation of his land and selling the use thereof to others for the irrigation of their lands, and that plaintiff was specially damaged in the sum of $420. Judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiff, and from said judgment, accompanied by a bill of exceptions, this appeal is taken.

The main question in this case is, to what extent plaintiff is entitled to control the waters taken to his land, over the lands of defendant from defendant's main irrigation ditch, under his conveyance from the latter. Counsel have devoted much discussion to the terms of both the deed and agreement as bearing on this question. We see no reason, however, why any consideration of the deed need be had. The matter before us is, not to what extent the plaintiff acquired a right to the waters conveyed by the deed or by the agreement, but whether the right which he was exercising of selling the use of the surplus waters taken to his lands to his neighbors was authorized under either. No question is involved here of a sale of the water right which plaintiff acquired; no question of a segregation of the right from the land to which appellant claims it was an easement appurtenant, or any attempt to dispose of such right to others to be used separate and apart from plaintiff's land and to his exclusion. What he has done, and what he claims the right to do, is to contract with his neighbors for the sale to them of the use of the surplus waters carried to his land, for limited periods of time. There was no sale made or attempted, and in effect what he was doing was to license the use of the waters to his neighbors for a rental during the period when he did not need them for the irrigation of his own land. If under the agreement this right was secured to him, it is immaterial whether it was also secured by the deed. And that it was secured by the agreement we think is not open to question.

Appellant's position is that the waters conveyed to the plaintiff's premises could be used only on the lands of the plaintiff and nowhere else; that the agreement did not convey the corpus of the waters, but merely an easement appurtenant consisting of the right to the flow and use of them to irrigate his own land, and no other. But upon inspection it will be seen that neither the covenant, nor the agreement, provides or says anything about using the waters on plaintiff's land for any purpose whatever, or at all. Plaintiff purchased a right to a given quantity of water to be received in his flume from the main irrigation ditch of defendant, and thence taken to his land. At the time of this agreement defendant had secured a prescriptive title to all of the waters of the Quito creek, and, as far as the parties to this agreement are concerned, these waters were the private property of the defendant. Parks C. & M. Co. v. Hoyt, 57 Cal. 44. Defendant had become as fully vested with the ownership in them as a person can be said to have acquired ownership in one of the natural elements, and the right which he conveyed to plaintiff was commensurate with the right which he had. Nor is there any merit in the claim that by the covenant in the agreement the water right conveyed under it became an easement appurtenant to plaintiff's lands so that the use of the waters was limited exclusively to such land. No doubt, by the covenant the water right itself was made an easement appurtenant to the land. But we look in vain to the agreement or to this covenant to find anything limiting or restricting the use of the water to the lands of plaintiff. It is not a case where by the very terms of the conveyance the right to use the water was expressly limited to lands to which the right was made appurtenant. Undoubtedly a grant of a water right may restrict the use of the waters to particular lands for irrigation purposes, or for domestic uses, for the operation of a mill, or for the development of mechanical power, or for other specific and designated purposes; but no such restriction is found in either the agreement or this covenant. In fact, when we examine the covenant, it is observed that what it was intended to effect, and did effect, was to make the water right granted an easement appurtenant to the land, and nothing more. It was not intended to, nor did it, create a limitation upon the use of the waters which plaintiff had purchased. The covenant, in as far as it applies to "rights" mentioned in it which were vested in the plaintiff, had relation only to the water right, and made it "appurtenant to and as a part and for the benefit of said lands of the party of the first part." The effect of this language was simply to make the water right an easement appurtenant to the lands which were already owned by the plaintiff. The term "for the benefit of said lands," used in connection with the word "appurtenant," did not limit or restrict, as is contended for by appellant, the use of the waters to the land of plaintiff in addition to making the water right appurtenant to it. As defined by the Code, a thing is "appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit." Civ. Code, § 662. And it is obvious that, in using the terms in the covenant declaring that the water right "shall * * * be deemed appurtenant to * * * and for the benefit of said lands," nothing more was meant by the expression "and for the benefit of said lands" than to couple with the word "appurtenant" its legal definition.

Nor does the further provision in the covenant, binding the appellant, with reference to the water rights conveyed, solely "to all subsequent owners of said land * * * and to the said party of the second part [plaintiff] but to no other person or persons," at all limit the use of the waters purchased by plaintiff to his own lands. Under the deed the grant of the water right to plaintiff was not expressly made appurtenant to the land. As it was possible, therefore, that some question might arise as to whether the plaintiff might not have the right to segregate the water right conveyed by the deed and sell it independent of his land, providing that no different or additional burden was imposed upon the servitude than then existed, and no substantial alteration in the mode of using the easement resulted, it was intended by the subsequent agreement to avoid all question on that score. This was accomplished by, in terms, declaring in the covenant that the water right should be not only appurtenant, but that it could not be conveyed, unless by a conveyance of the land itself, and this was all that it was intended to accomplish. As the covenant relied on did not limit or restrain plaintiff as to the use of the water conveyed to him, and there is nothing anywhere else in the agreement which pretends to do so, we are satisfied that plaintiff had a legal right to temporarily dispose of the use of the waters conveyed to his property as he saw fit when he did not need it for his own use. As we have before said, the plaintiff has not and is not attempting to dispose of any water right, but solely of the use for a limited period by his neighbors for irrigation purposes of waters which he owned, and to the entire use of which he was entitled, but which he then had no necessity to use. In so doing we do not see how he invaded any right of defendant, or what concern the latter has in the matter. Plaintiff is not wasting the water or applying it to other than a beneficial use. By the agreement plaintiff became entitled to one-fifth in quantity of the waters of the main irrigation ditch with a right to carry them to his own land. It is not pretended that he is taking out of the main irrigation ditch any greater quantity than he purchased, whether he used it on his own land, or only used part of it there, and disposed of the surplus. Appellant's position sems to be that, because plaintiff does not need upon his own land all that he purchased and carried there, it is entitled to the surplus or residuum; but, as the sale to plaintiff was of a specified quantity of water, if any such right is available to defendant it must have been reserved in the agreement of conveyance, and we have seen that there was no such reservation. The grant to plaintiff of this water was not restrained by any limitations or conditions whatever. The right to the waters—the right to use them for beneficial purposes—was vested in plaintiff as a property right, and, when the waters were conducted to his land and under his control, he had the right as incident to his ownership of them to make such disposition of their use as he saw fit, limited, of course, to a beneficial use of them. As he had purchased the right to the use of all the waters conveyed from the irrigation ditch, he was entitled to an unrestricted control over that use. He was not limited by any contract with defendant upon the subject. He is not taking any more water than he purchased, and is not using himself or licensing to his neighbors more than he bought. Having purchased the use of a given quantity, if he cannot use it all himself, we see no reason why he cannot sell the right to a temporary use of it to his neighbors, as wanted, for a beneficial purpose. To hold that he cannot do so would be to impose a restriction for which no warrant is found in the agreement of purchase, and would be in effect to deprive him of a valuable incident to the ownership of this character of property, the right to dispose of its use to others when it is not required for use by the owner himself. There is no law which will impose the limitation contended for by appellant. As there, then, is nothing in the terms of the agreement or the covenant relied on limiting the use of the waters purchased by plaintiff to his own lands, or any rule of law that we are advised of so restricting him from disposing of such use, the conclusion reached by the lower court, that plaintiff had a right to make such disposal of the waters purchased by him, was correct.

As to the only other point in the case, the award of special damages: Appellant insists that the finding upon which the judgment therefor is based is not supported by the evidence. The evidence upon this subject is very meager, and consists of that of the plaintiff. He testified that, between January 16, 1902, and April 19th of the same year, he was selling, or had contracted to sell, the waters to be used on his neighbors' lands; that under the contracts therefor he had negotiated for 21 days' sale of water at $20 per day; and that the flume of plaintiff was obstructed by defendant on April 19, 1902. On this evidence the court made its finding of special damages in the sum of $420. The finding is not sustained by the evidence. It was necessary, in support of the claim for special damages, that clear proof of them be made. All that the evidence shows is that plaintiff was selling water under contracts for 21 days' use between January 16th and April 19, 1902. It does not appear when any of the contracts were made, or at what time the supply of water was to be furnished, or whether any of it had been furnished during the above dates. As the obstruction was not placed in the flume until April 19th it does not appear how many days' use was had under the contracts between January 16, 1902, and the damming of plaintiff's flume, or whether the contracts were for the supply of water before April 19th, or after. It cannot be said that there is any evidence of a definite character upon the subject of special damages.

The judgment therefore is reversed as to that portion of it which awards special damages, and a new trial is ordered to be had solely upon the issue of special damages. As to all the rest of the judgment, it is affirmed. Appellant is entitled to its costs on appeal.

UNION SAVINGS BANK OF SAN JOSE v. WILLARD. (Civ. 273.)

CORPORATIONS—ASSESSMENTS—LIABILITY OF SUBSCRIBER.

Civ. Code, § 322, in relation to the liabilities of stockholders, provides that each stockholder is individually liable for such proportion of the corporate liabilities as his stock bears to the whole of the stock, and that the term "stockholder" applies to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appear on the books of the company in the name of another. Held that, where shares of stock appeared on the corporate books in the name of one as trustee for another, the former, as between himself and the corporation, was a stockholder, and liable to the corporation for the amount of an assessment on an unpaid subscription; section 322 being applicable only to actions against stockholders by creditors of the corporation.

Wm. A. Bowden, for appellant. Cobb & Rea, for respondent.

HALL, J. "Action to recover from the defendant the amount of an assessment by the plaintiff upon the shares of its capital stock held by him. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

"The authority of the plaintiff to levy the assessment and to collect the same by an action against its stockholders, together with the regularity of its proceedings therein, was affirmed in the cases of the same plaintiff against Dunlap, 135 Cal. 628, 67 Pac. 1084, and against Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441, cases which involve the same assessment as that here presented. The only question presented upon the present appeal is whether the appellant was a stockholder of the plaintiff at the time the assessment was levied; the plaintiff alleging that he was such stockholder, and the defendant denying this allegation. Upon this issue the court made the following finding: 'At and during all the times herein mentioned the defendant, Maurice Willard, was and still is the owner and holder of 35 shares of such capital stock, and of one certificate therefor theretofore duly and regularly issued by said corporation, and numbered 598, and at the time of levying of said assessment herein mentioned said shares of stock appeared on the corporate stock books of said corporation as follows: "Maurice Willard, Tr. for Alfred J. Willard," and said shares of corporate stock of said corporation still so appeared on the corporate stock books of said corporation.' This finding is challenged by the defendant as not supported by the evidence, and in his statement on motion for a new trial he contends that, upon the evidence before the court, it was shown that he was not at any time the owner or holder of any shares of the capital stock of the plaintiff, but that he held a certificate of stock therefor solely and only as trustee for Alfred J. Willard, and not otherwise. At the trial of the cause it was stipulated that at all the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant held a certificate of stock of the plaintiff, of which the following is a copy: 'San Jose, California, March 19, 1896. This certifies that Maurice Willard, trustee for Alfred J. Willard, is entitled to thirty-five shares (35) of the capital stock of the Union Savings Bank of San Jose, California, transferable only on the books of the bank in person, or by attorney, upon the surrender of this certificate properly indorsed, and after compliance with the conditions printed on its back.' It was also stipulated that the books of the plaintiff all show that the stock was issued to 'Maurice Willard, trustee for Alfred J. Willard,' the same as shown in said certificate, and that the defendant was not at any time the owner or holder of any stock of the plaintiff, except that represented and evidenced by said certificate.

"Upon these facts it must be held that the appellant was a stockholder of the plaintiff and liable to it for the amount of the assessment. His name is entered upon the books of the plaintiff as one of its stockholders, and a certificate of the ownership of the shares of stock so subscribed by him was issued and delivered to him. Whether he was an original subscriber for the shares of stock represented by said certificate, or had them transferred to him from one who was such original subscriber, is immaterial. The liability which attached to the original subscriber by virtue of his subscription is inseparable from the ownership of the stock. Upon causing its transfer to him upon the books of the plaintiff, the defendant was substituted for such original subscriber, and thereafter held the stock upon the same conditions and subject to the same obligations as did such original subscriber. Visalia R. R. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136. He thereby entered into a contractual relation with the plaintiff, and is the person who is entitled to be recognized as a stockholder by it and by its other stockholders for the purpose of voting the said shares of stock, or at any stockholders' meeting of the plaintiff, and to receive whatever dividends may be declared upon said stock. The addition of the words 'trustee for Alfred J. Willard' does not change his relation to the plaintiff, or bring Alfred J. Willard into any relation with the plaintiff. The nature of the trust between him and Alfred J. Willard, or the relation existing between them, is not made to appear; but whatever such relation may be or whatever may be his duties as such trustee, is a matter entirely outside of his relation to the plaintiff. By having the stock issued to him he became one of the stockholders of the plaintiff, and, being the person in whom the legal title to the stock is vested, is the legal owner thereof (Market St. R. R. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 Pac. 225), and the only person whom the plaintiff can recognize as the holder of the stock so issued to him. If, by reason of any agreement or relation with Alfred J. Willard, the latter is the equitable owner of the stock, this fact is in no respect available as a defense to the plaintiff's right to enforce the collection of the assessment from him. Morawitz says (volume 1 [2d Ed.] § 304): 'The legal owner of shares in a corporation is liable to the company for calls made upon the shares, though he be a trustee for another person; and the beneficiary cannot be made responsible, for he is not a party to the contract from which the liability for calls arises." See, also, 3 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 3193, 3194; Mitchell's Case, Law Rep. 9 Eq. 366.

"Section 322, Civ. Code, upon which the appellant relies, has no application to an action by the corporation against its stockholders for the recovery of an assessment upon the stock held by them. The provisions of that section are limited to actions against stockholders by creditors of the corporation to recover the proportional amounts of their liability for the obligations of the corporation and the exemption therein which is relied upon by the appellant is by its express language limited to proceedings to 'charge the stockholders with any proportion of the debts or liabilities of the corporation.' The present action, as before shown, is not upon the statutory liability of the defendant for the debts of the plaintiff, but is upon his subscription for the stock and his contract to pay the plaintiff for the same. The liability of the defendant to the creditors of the corporation for his proportion of their claims against the corporation, and his liability to the corporation for the unpaid portion of his subscription, are entirely distinct, and rest upon different principles. Visalia R. R. Co. v. Hyde, supra. Welles v. Larrabee (C. C.) 36 Fed. 866, 2 L. R. A. 471, also cited by the appellant, did not present the question of the liability of a trustee upon his subscription for the stock, but involved the construction of section 5152, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3465]. That section provides that: 'Persons holding stock as executors, administrators, guardians or trustees shall not be personally subject to any liabilities as stockholders.' The defendant therein was a naked trustee for the real owner of the stock, and was shown to have no interest in it."

The foregoing opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice HARRISON shortly before the expiration of his term as presiding justice of this court; but, as the other members of the court had not, at his retirement, fully satisfied themselves of the correctness of his views, the opinion was not filed. After careful consideration of the question involved, we are satisfied that the opinion as prepared by Mr. Justice HARRISON contains a correct statement of the law applicable to the case, and we therefore adopt it as the opinion of this court. In addition to the authorities cited by Mr. Justice HARRISON, we cite, as sustaining the rule that a trustee, recorded as such on the corporate books, is liable for the unpaid subscription price of stock, 1 Cook on Corporations (5th Ed.) § 245.

McQUEEN v. PHELAN et al. (Civ. 303.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 19, 1907.)

1. APPEAL — JUDGMENT ROLL — FINDINGS — CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where an appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, the court's findings that plaintiff's carpet-cleaning works constituted a public nuisance would be deemed to be supported by the evidence.

2. INJUNCTION—ACTS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS—ABATEMENT OF NUISANCE.

Where plaintiff's carpet-cleaning works constituted a public nuisance, plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining public officers of the city, authorized by Civ. Code, § 3494, to abate the same, from proceeding against or interfering with plaintiff in the operation of the works.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 155.]

Geo. W. Schell, for appellant. Lewis F. Byington, Franklin K. Lane, and Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendants taken on the judgment roll. The action was brought against the mayor, the board of supervisors, the chief of police, and the department of public health of the city and county of San Francisco, as defendants, in their official capacities, for the purpose of enjoining them from interfering with the plaintiff's carpet beating and cleaning works and the operation of the same, also to have declared void a certain ordinance set forth in the complaint, upon the ground that it is unconstitutional in several respects.

For the purposes of this case it may be conceded that the ordinance is void, and yet the judgment must be affirmed. The complaint, after setting forth a description of the plaintiff's plant and carpet-beating works, contains this allegation: "Plaintiff further alleges that said works and plant and the operation thereof is in no respect a public nuisance, or a nuisance in any particular, or injurious to health, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction in any wise to the free use of property." In the answer the defendants deny the above-quoted allegation, and also aver "that the carpet beating and cleaning works and operation thereof, mentioned in the complaint, have always been and are a nuisance." The answer further avers: "That the nuisance and injury to health, and offensive character, and obstruction to the free use of property caused by said carpet-beating works, and the operation thereof, mentioned by plaintiff in said amended complaint, has been carried on and prevailing, and is still being carried on and prevailing. * * * Said carpet-beating works constitute a nuisance in that locality, and to the residents, families, and people thereof, and the same is in fact, owing to its nature and character, very injurious and a great menace to the health of the people of said locality, and very offensive to the senses of said people and residents, * * * and a great obstruction to the free or comfortable use and enjoyment of property." The case thus appears to have gone to trial upon a distinct issue as to whether or not the premises described in the complaint were or were not a nuisance. The court found that "the carpet beating and cleaning works, and the operation thereof, mentioned in the amended complaint, have always been and are a nuisance in the locality in which they have been and are maintained and operated, and in and to the neighborhood and the inhabitants thereabouts; that said carpet beating and cleaning works have been and are a public nuisance and a menace to the health of the residents of the locality in which the same have been and are constructed and operated, and the same, and also the dust and refuse emitted from said works, have been and are indecent and offensive to the senses of the people thereabouts, and an obstruction to the free use of their property, homes, and places of residence."

As this appeal is upon the judgment roll, the above-quoted findings of the court are conclusive here, and must be deemed to be supported by the evidence. It is provided in section 3494 of the Civil Code "that a public nuisance may be abated by any public body or officer authorized thereto by law." It thus appearing that the premises and business described in the complaint are a public nuisance, and that the public officials, defendants in this action, are about to do an act which they are authorized to do by the section of the Code above quoted, it follows that the question as to whether or not the ordinance was a valid ordinance becomes immaterial. We do not mean to intimate that any public official may, of his own volition, without any order of court, tear down or destroy a building because he believes it to be a nuisance. The prayer of the complaint is that defendants be enjoined and restrained from proceeding against or interfering with plaintiff in the operation of said works. The judgment in such case, being for defendants, has only the effect of denying the injunction prayed for. We must presume that the defendants will proceed according to law.

COOK v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (Civ. 319.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 4, 1907.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONTRACT OF SALE—PERFORMANCE—DILIGENCE.

Where defendant railroad company sold certain land in 1886, and agreed to use ordinary diligence to procure patents from the government therefor, it did not breach such provision by delay in procuring patents which was occasioned by the failure of the Land Department to approve the report of commissioners until 1897, on which approval alone patents could be issued, and on account of litigation in the federal courts relating to the railroad's right to patents.

Wm. Singer, Jr., and Guy Shoup, for appellant. Houx & Barrett, for respondent.

COOPER, J. This action was brought to recover $1,600, with interest, claimed to be due plaintiff from defendant under the terms of four separate, but similar, contracts for the sale of land, in each of which the defendant was the vendor, and the assignor of plaintiff was the vendee. Judgment was entered for plaintiff upon findings made by the court, and from the judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. Each of the contracts contained the following provision, to wit: "It is further agreed, between the parties hereto, that the party of the first part claims all the tracts hereinbefore described, as part of a grant of lands to it by Congress of the United States; that patent has not yet issued to it for said tracts; that it will use ordinary diligence to procure patents for them that as, in consequence of circumstances beyond its control, it sometimes fails to obtain patent for lands that seem to be legally a portion of its said grant, therefore, nothing in this instrument shall be considered a guarantee or assurance that patent or title will be procured; that in case it be finally determined that patent shall not issue to said party of the first part for all or any of the tracts herein described, it will, upon demand, repay (without interest) to the party * * * of the second part, all moneys that may have been paid to it." Each contract is pleaded as a separate cause of action. In each count it is alleged that it has been finally determined that patent shall not issue to defendant for an undivided moiety of the land described in the contract, and also that defendant has not exercised ordinary diligence to procure a patent to the land. The evidence showed, and the court found, that after the commencement of the action a patent was issued (in November, 1903) to defendant for the lands described in the complaint. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the issue as to a patent not having been granted to defendant. The court found that the defendant "did not and has not used ordinary diligence to procure a patent to the lands mentioned in said contract, or in any of them, or any part of said lands." It was the above-quoted finding upon which the court below gave judgment in favor of plaintiff; and upon the question as to whether or not the said finding is supported by the evidence the case must here be decided.

The facts here are similar to those discussed in Southern Pacific R. Company v. Lipman (Cal. Sup.) 83 Pac. 445. In that case the contracts were dated September, 1888, while in this case they were dated June, 1886. The contract in each case related to lands included in the same grant to defendant. In this case the provision in the contracts to the effect that plaintiff would use ordinary diligence to procure patents to the lands is precisely in the same language as in the Lipman Case. In that case, as in the case at bar, it was found by the court below that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had not used ordinary diligence to procure patent to the lands. In that case, as in the case at bar, it was claimed that such finding was without evidence to support it. It was there held, upon a full discussion of the facts, that the finding was not supported by the evidence. The court there said: "There is no evidence in the case to sustain this finding, but, on the contrary, what evidence was introduced on the subject (and it was all introduced by the plaintiff) shows that for several years prior to the execution of these contracts, and continuously thereafter, plaintiff at all times vigorously asserted its claims for all the lands, primary and indemnity, to which it claimed title under the acts of 1866, and as early as 1888 it made application to the Land Department under the act of 1866 for patents to lands of similar character and similarly situated to those described in the contracts here. * * * While it appears that the plaintiff in fact filed its lists of selections of the lands described in the contract here in question in 1893 and 1894, the ordinary diligence to procure them which it contracted for would have been fully discharged had the application not been filed until the acceptance and approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the commissioners' report, which was the earliest possible time an application could have been effective and a patent procured upon it. Aside from the proceedings before the Interior Department involving plaintiff's right to patent for these lands, we have seen that its rights thereto were also a matter of litigation in the federal courts, culminating in the decision found in Southern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 183 U. S. 519, 22 Sup. Ct. 154, 46 L. Ed. 307, which we have heretofore referred to and discussed. It will be thus observed that whatever delay in the procurement of patents for these lands occurred was occasioned, not by any want of ordinary diligence on the part of plaintiff, but from the failure of the Land Department, until 1897, to approve the report of the commissioners, upon which approval alone patents could be issued, and on account of the litigation arising in the federal courts relative to plaintiff's right to patents. Wilson v. S. P. R. R. Co., 135 Cal. 421, 67 Pac. 688. From these considerations it is obvious that the finding that the plaintiff did not use ordinary diligence, as provided in the contract, to procure patents for these lands also finds no support in the evidence."

We must hold the above case conclusive upon the question here. In Southern Pac. Railroad Co. v. Bovard (Cal.) 87 Pac. 203, 2 App. Dist., opinion filed July 9, 1906, it was held that the plaintiff was the owner of the lands described in its complaint. The lands were part of the same grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad as the lands involved in this action. The Lipman Case is cited as authority.

It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (Cr. 4.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 26, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where, in a criminal case, accused and his witnesses showed his moral depravity, the conduct of the prosecuting attorney in asking witnesses questions showing the moral depravity of accused was not prejudicial, within Pen. Code, § 1404, requiring the court to disregard errors, unless the same have actually prejudiced accused, though the court only sustained objections to the questions, and struck out the answers without directing counsel by express command to refrain from further questioning.

On rehearing. Denied.

McLAUGHLIN, J. Ordinarily the formal order would be the only response to a petition for rehearing; but mistaken brevity in the opinion filed having led counsel of recognized ability to the belief that we had based the decision on mistaken facts, prompts a departure from the rule in this instance. We have again carefully examined the evidence and specifications, only to reach the same conclusion.

All that reached the jury touching the character of the house came into the case through defendant's agency, and the character of the inmates necessarily came with it. Strong and convincing evidence of defendant's relations with the woman Banks was presented to the jury through the same channels, and that which came to the jury through the prosecution was admissible under well-settled rules of evidence. The testimony of defendant alone tells the story of his relations with her. Jurors must be credited with average intelligence, and it needs no more to know that early morning visits to the room of a prostitute, borrowing money from her, and stirring her to wrath and threats by the story of contemplated marriage indicate more than a merely casual and platonic intimacy. And, when to this is added the testimony of William Campbell and George Storrs, it needs not her possession of his trunk or other facts wrung from Lillie Banks and other witnesses on unwarranted cross-examination to remove all doubt as to what their relations were. True, some evidence as to their relations did reach the jury through the prosecution, but more of it was part and parcel of testimony touching his admissions of guilt. These admissions were none the less admissible because they were made to a prostitute while he was seated upon the bed of shame in which she was lying. His familiarity, his admissions, and conduct incompatible with his innocence were relevant facts, and pertinent evidence cannot be excluded merely because it savors of the brothel and carries with it the stigma of infamy. Besides, the bulk of it came in without objection. People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 517, 36 Pac. 16. The court sustained objections to and struck out answers to the two questions so bitterly complained of. The refusal to check counsel by express command was neutralized by counsel refraining from further questioning. Ordinarily irrelevant questions tending to show other wrongful acts or moral depravity would be prejudicial, but, when a defendant through his own lips and witnesses writes his shame upon the record, it would be sticking in the bark to hold that mere insinuations could injure.

Section 1404 of the Penal Code commands that error shall be disregarded, "unless it has actually prejudiced the defendant, or tended to his prejudice in respect to a substantial right"; and it would be a travesty on justice to say that these questions, or even the answers to them, could degrade or injure a man in the eyes of a jury when he calmly told the same jury of frequent visits, borrowing money, and the wrath inspired in the breast of a prostitute when he told her he was to be married. During the cross-examination of these women and Dependener, as well as in the examination of defendant's witnesses, there was a shrewd, skillful, and persistent atempt by adroit and ingenious questioning to make it appear that there was no talk or thought of crime or prosecution until after this woman knew defendant was to marry. These witnesses had testified to his incriminating statements and conduct, and Lillie Banks said he never told her of marriage, and on one occasion had said that he came after his trunk and clothes. Following all other witnesses, the defendant contradicted the evidence as to his statements and conduct. He gave entirely different versions of such conversations and the reasons for his presence in the house. He told what Lillie Banks said when told of his matrimonial intentions, and attempted to account for his conduct and acts from Saturday night until the time of his last visit to the house. He, too, testified that he heard nothing of crime or prosecution until after this matter of marriage had been bruited.

His cross-examination was confined to matters brought out in direct examination. It was competent to test his credibility by asking questions tending to show that there was no engagement or thought of marriage at the time he says he told Lillie Banks of his impending marriage, nor until some days after he went to Sacramento. The question as to why he did not remove his trunk and clothing when about to make his wedding trip was also proper in this connection, and for the further reason that he had denied all such conversations testified to by Dependener and the women.

The sharp conflict in the evidence, defendant's credibility as contrasted with the credibility of the women, and the theory that he was innocent and the prosecution a conspiracy, hatched after marriage, excused and rendered nonprejudicial, if it did not entirely justify, the argument.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

CHIPMAN, P. J., and BUCKLES, J., concurred.

BROWN v. LOS ANGELES RY. CO. (Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1906.) A petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court, after judgment in the district court of appeal, was denied by the Supreme Court on March 8, 1906, and the following opinion rendered thereon:

BEATTY, C. J. Upon the evidence in this case, the findings and conclusions of the superior court are clearly sustained by the doctrine of "last clear chance."
